P R E F A C E.

IT is hoped that our little work may provide travellers and residents in Persia with a short text in the colloquial language of the present day. When the editors were themselves in Tehrán trying to learn Persian, they could find no book of this kind; and such a book they felt would have greatly facilitated their progress in the art of making themselves intelligible to the natives. One may know book Persian, and be scholar enough to read a letter, but, unfortunately, for the purposes of inquiring the road of a peasant, or for ordinary conversation with a native gentleman, phrases industriously culled out of the Gulistán and the other orthodox text-books will be found to contain ten useless words to each one that may serve the purpose in hand. There are dialogues in modern Persian it is true, particularly those of M. Nicolas, that are justly admired for their idiomatic language, but a book of dry phrases is no text for daily lessons with the Munshí. What we wanted was some work that should be easy, entertaining, and thoroughly colloquial, so that no words should be burdened on the memory that could not be put to immediate use; and also that it should contain a vocabulary with the actual meanings of the words employed, meanings that are often lacking in the great dictionary of Johnson. Such a book we never found, and we trust to have supplied the want.

The translation may be found interesting, too, by those who do not intend to learn Persian, for it presents a faithful portrait of life in this quarter of the East, with its harem intrigues, and so-called justice and law.

The student must not run away with the idea that we deprecate the study of such works as the Gulistan, or even the Anvári Suhaili; only as their authors were not modern Irání, one must not turn to them when there is need of a style and a vocabulary with the phraseology of to-day. We may want, too, something less pompous in style than the official newspaper and the ordinary letter, and with fewer obsolete Arabic words than the Persian version of the Arabian Nights, though these give the modern high-class Irání. Besides, if the truth be spoken, all these classical works prove hopelessly uninteresting to the European reader, whose taste in literary matters is far from coinciding with that of a Moslem critic during the golden age of Persian literature. And it cannot be insisted on too often that these works not only contain numberless obsolete words and little-used technical terms, but also that they present this disadvantage when read as text-books, namely, that the vocabulary with which the learner burdens his memory will be found very inadequate for conversational purposes in polite society on the topics of the day; and also that to servants, mule-drivers, peasants &c. (with whom a traveller must be constantly talking), the involved constructions and the grandiloquent phrases used by these authors are totally incomprehensible. Official documents, and even the ordinary titles superscribed on the envelope and at the head of a Persian letter, contain many high-sounding Arabic phrases that no ordinary Persian ever pretends to understand. He has been taught these words parrot-fashion when at school, and duly writes them ; but they never pass his lips, except when he may be called upon to read some letter out loud, when their sound is distinctly of more import than their sense. The classical authors, of course, make a great display of their learning by using long words, but to employ these in conversation is regarded as an absurd affectation. As Persians often remark, foreigners talk their language in such an exquisite way that a dictionary is necessary to understand the drift of the argument ; perhaps a Persian who had learnt English through Chaucer, or even Shakespeare, would not be very intelligible in a London hotel of the nineteenth century.

Another difficulty we all found was for the pronunciation of modern Persian. Almost all the books that purport to teach this language are written by persons whose studies have been carried on in Europe or India, where, as we have noted in the Introduction, the pronunciation is antiquated, and often fundamentally incorrect. In this matter we hope to have given, as nearly as it can be done with our characters, the pronunciation of Tehrân, and we have added some general remarks in the Introduction that may help to elucidate this point.

The play now printed is taken from a little book lithographed in Tehrân. It is the first of the seven plays that the work contains, and in many ways perhaps is the most interesting of the collection. The author, Mirzâ Jaafar, is only in reality a translator from the works of a certain Fath Ali, who composed his work in Azerbaijan-Turkish : this original we were unable to procure. But though translated from the Turkish, an examination of the plays will show that the phraseology of the dialogue is very idiomatic Persian. The translator, in fact, must have rendered his Turkish text somewhat freely, for his proverbs and allusions are all pure Irání.

The Persian Preface, which is placed at the head of the Tehrán edition, is too verbose to give in extenso; but an abstract may not prove uninteresting to the European reader. Its style is so thoroughly Oriental, and we see how small is still their knowledge in the technical part of the drama, in spite of the Passion Plays commemorating the tragical fate of Hasan and Huseyn, that have been common all over Persia for some centuries.*

The title-page states the contents of the book to be “Plays translated by Mírzá Jaafar, a native of Karájeh-Dágh, printed in Tehrán during the month Rabí I. of the year 1291 of the Flight” (A.D. 1874).

The price of the book (one tomán = eight shillings) is given, and also the places in Tehrán and Tabriz where the work may be procured.

After the customary adulation of the reigning Shah, Násir-ad-Dín, the translator proceeds to point out, by means of an Apologue, that, in order that the reader may derive a benefit from its perusal, the book should not be read in a perfunctory manner.

Then comes the Preface proper. The translator, Mírzá Jaafar, adverts to the fact that up to the present time no Comedies have appeared in Persia. But since it is well known that such compositions not only instruct and cause diversion to the general public, but also greatly aid foreigners (whether Azarbajjání Turks or others) in mastering the language, and gaining an insight into the manners of the people; therefore he, Mírzá Jaafar, had often regretted the lack of any such Plays, and was now endeavouring to supply this deficiency, trusting in doing so the more surely to hand down his name to posterity, than by occupying himself in any other species of literary composition.

He then proceeds to state that he has met with an excellent collection of such pieces in Turkish, conspicuous in the simplicity of its language, and the absence of all rhetorical, bombastic, or obsolete words (whereby it differed advantageously from all previous works), and that from this book he has translated the following Plays.

His labours are especially dedicated to the use of children in the schools, who up to the present time have been forced to learn dry, antiquated books, unsuited to their mental capacities, and discouraging from the fact that the works are lacking in general interest. And he also would recommend his book to foreigners, in the place of those translations from the Evangelists which have hitherto served them as text-books. To these latter will not his Plays be even doubly useful? In reading his Comedies, the translator begs that especial attention may be paid to enunciation and emphasis—so important to a just understanding of the ‘parts.’ In representing the speech of the lower classes, he has admitted into his text many words incorrectly, or rather phonetically spelt (of which he gives some examples), they being characteristic of the popular pronunciation: and the various interjections have been added where necessary, such as vah! bah! ay! ukh! and the like, although hitherto it has not been customary to insert these in written compositions. He points out that the names of the interlocutors, stage and other directions, have been given to prevent any mistakes ; but, at the same time, he cautions the reader that such names and phrases form no part of the dialogue. It is particularly to be insisted on that the speeches be uttered in a lively, brisk way, not according to the usual sing-song of the schools, or the intoned drawl of poetical recitations, but even as in the living speech of the people, where astonishment, wonder, queries, fear, silence, laughter, weeping, anger, affection, terror, joking, exclamations, passion, and serenity, are all indicated by the inflections of the voice ; and also let the utterances of old men, Armenians and Feringhís, be rendered after the hesitating manner characteristic of such folk. And for the rest, writes Mírzá Jaafar, each one must follow his own taste.

Then comes a disquisition translated from the original Turkish author of the Plays, who mentions himself at the close under the name of Mírzá Fath-Alí Ákhund-Zádah ; he sets forth his general observations on the Dramatic Art. The rules of intonation, gesture, etc., as cultivated by the Europeans in their theatres, are given ; for the author very justly observes, that among the people of Islâm (who have no school of this art) these laws are mostly neglected in the only species of dramatic representation which they possess—namely, in the Tragedies on the Death of the Imáms. The author, too, assures his co-religionists that there is nothing in the theatres of Feringhistan repugnant to either good manners or public morals.

Following all of which, seeing that His Excellency Waran-soff, Governor of the Caucasus Province had, in the year of the Hejra 1266 (A.D. 1850) built a theatre in Tiflis, he, the author, Mírzá Fath-Alí, has felt himself incited to compose these Plays, six in number, followed by a Tale. And he concludes his remarks by averring that, unlike other authors, he courts the criticism of his public, wishing them by no means to be silent on his faults; but, on the contrary, let everybody, according to his ability, point these out, that Dramas may become known and be acted among Moslems: and in this he feels proud of having set the first example. To all of which the translator, Mírzá Jaafar, adds that for the present he has only translated two Plays;* in the following year, however, he hopes, by the aid of Allah, to print the remainder, that all, both great and small, may learn thereby.

At the conclusion of the Preface the transcriber for the lithography records his name, it being Muhammad Jaafar Munshí.

We have not been able to discover that the Persian translation of these Plays has ever been actually performed on a stage, either in Tehrán or elsewhere. For it would require the use of far more scenery and drilling for stage effect than is customary in the Muharram Passion Plays, and their ignorance in such matters was deplored by Mírzá Fath-Alí in his original Preface. In these latter there is not a stage on the one side, as in Europe, with the audience facing in one direction towards the actors and the back ground. For the performance takes place in a huge sort of circus, with boxes raised, tier above tier, all round, looking on to a circular platform, on which the actors strut and declaim, with neither side-wings nor background. When they have said their parts, they simply stand aside, in full view of the audience, awaiting their turn to speak again. This manner of doing things would, of course, be out of the question in a Comedy such as the present one, where sudden exits and entrances, cupboards to hide in, and a certain amount of stage effect, are all indispensable for the action of the Play.

* The Tehrán volume is bound up so as to contain Mírzá Jaafar's subsequent publications.

It is hoped that the Notes and the Vocabulary will be found complete, and that the former will explain the difficulties of idiom, and the allusions that may occur in the text.

By the student the Translation should, of course, only be used after the words, and, if possible, the meaning of the Text, have been made out with the Vocabulary. If the learner would so study the text as to be able each day to turn his last lesson back into Persian again by means of this Translation, he would find his trouble more than repaid in the rapid progress he would make. And it may safely be said that there is hardly a sentence in the whole Play that he might not find daily occasion to use in the Bázars.

In conclusion, our thanks are due to Mírzá Bákír, a Persian scholar whose really profound knowledge of his own classical Arabic and Persian has been methodized and rendered available to Europeans from his mastery of English, and his studies in our Western Sciences. By his aid it is hoped that the Translation will be found correct, for in the Text the absence of all punctuation, points of interrogation, exclamation, etc., often renders a phrase ambiguous to any one but a native. In our English version we have aimed at keeping as closely to the text, as was consistent with perspicuity in rendering from a foreign tongue.

Should this Play be found useful to students of modern Persian, others might be published and annotated out of Mírzá Jaafar's little book.

INTRODUCTION.

On the Transliteration used in the Vocabulary, together with some remarks on the Pronunciation of Modern Persian, and certain anomalies in Pronunciation, Spelling and Writing.

THE transliteration of the Persian character given in the Vocabulary, Notes, and Introduction is that used by Dr. W. W. Hunter in the " Imperial Gazetteer of India," 1881, and also by Mr. E. Thomas in the " International Numismata Orientala," and it is the system adopted for all official publications by the Government. But, in order to mark two very distinct sounds in the Irání pronunciation, it has been necessary to add the diphthong ey as pronounced in 'they,' in addition to ai, the diphthong in 'Lyre.' Also the dotted káf has been transcribed k̄, for it is important that the student should constantly be reminded how very different is the pronunciation of ȝ from و.

For colloquial purposes it is naturally of primary importance that the learner should be able to make himself understood ; and the natives will not understand him unless he will make a point, when learning a word, of catching at the same time its true sound—and he must do this from the very beginning. If this be carefully attended to all will go well, but nothing is more irradicable than a bad habit in pronunciation ; and hence the learner's attention should be directed to correctness in this matter rather than to the early acquisition of a large vocabulary.

This last cannot fail to come in time, while a good accent is by no means a necessary consequence of familiarity with the language.

A European is the more likely to fall into error from the fact that our best dictionaries often register an antiquated pronunciation, unrecognised by modern Iránís. Also, that if the teacher be an Indian or a Stambúlí Persian, words may be as much transmogrified in his mouth as French often is by an Englishman.

While on this subject it should be remarked that one and the same Arabic word has a very different sound, according, as it is used in Persian, in Turkish, or in Hindustani. We Europeans do much the same. A Latin word (Jupiter, for instance), when incorporated into English, French and German, loses its original Roman sound, and is pronounced by us moderns in accordance with the phonetic laws of the tongue in which it happens to be used.

And so in Eastern tongues, where the classic Arabic has flooded the vocabulary of all Moslem nations. An example will make this clear. The word J, in Arabic is pronounced Awwal, but this word in the mouth of a Persian is Avval, while a Turk says Evvél, and a Hindu Uvvul.

Now Persian is a classical language, much studied beyond the geographical limits of its use as a vernacular; and it is of every day remark that the Europeans who have learnt their Persian, let us say, in Constantinople, are as a rule very incomprehensible to the Tehránís. And this even though the student may have been well taught and be profoundly read in Persian literature. For to quote but a single instance, all his short a's will be pronounced like the French è's. The Anglo-Indian on the other hand not only turns his short a's into u's, but calls miz, 'a table,' meyz (like maize Indian corn) — a pronunciation which was correct perhaps originally, but is none the less entirely obsolete at the present day.

The pronunciation we have given in the vocabulary is, as nearly as possible, that of Tehrán. For there are considerable dialectic differences in the various provinces, and this more especially in the pronunciation of the vowels.

Also since Azerbaiján Turkish is the vernacular of the Northern Provinces, a Turkish accent is very perceptible when a native of these parts talks Persian.

§ 1. THE CONSONANTS.

The Persians in accepting the Arabic Alphabet have adopted some characters which represented sounds originally foreign to their language. The pronunciation of these letters they have therefore modified, assimilating them to some cognate letter in their own tongue. Hence it is that there are four characters all pronounced indifferently z, with three for s, and two signs a piece for both the t and h, as may be seen from a glance at the Table.

Since the object of the transliteration is entirely phonetic, no attempt has been made to discriminate in the Latin letters between these homophones. On the other hand, the Persians have had to add to their Alphabet (by the addition of extra diacritical points), four characters to indicate sounds unknown to the Arab utterance—to wit, the letters for p, ch, zh and g. Let the reader carefully study this table.

ا alif, a prop for a short vowel, or to mark a long a.

پ p } as in English.
ت t }

ث s

ج j as in 'John.'

چ ch as in 'church.'

ح h a strong aspirate.

خ kh the German or Scotch ch, guttural.

د d } as in English.
ذ z }

ر r well rolled, as in French.

ز z as in English.

ڙ zh like the si in 'persuasion,' or the French j in س s 'jour.'

ش sh

ص s as in English.

ض z

ط t

ظ z

ع ain, a prop for a vowel or a hiatus.

غ gh, a strong guttural.

ف f as in English.

ق k a k pronounced at the back of the throat.

ك k

گ g

ل l

م m as in English.
ن n

و v or w

ه h

ي y (consonant.)

The greater number of these letters are pronounced exactly as with us, and therefore need no comment. What follows will elucidate such as are in any way peculiar.

§ The č often holds the place of the Arab ī: this, though incorrect, is sanctioned by usage. E.g. such words as حالت, قوت, for حالة, قوة.

§ Kh, as noted, is the guttural ch of the Germans (in 'machen') or the Scotch ch (in loch). But in German and Scotch this sound seldom, if ever, begins the syllable, while in Persian words, like khún, 'blood,' are very frequent. The learner should be careful not to pronounce this letter like a k, or he will fall into the most ludicrous mistakes.

§ The letter h (whether ه or ء) is a strong aspirate; and there is this to be remarked, that in the mouth of a Persian h is as a rule as sensible to the ear at the end of a syllable as with us it is at the beginning. For instance, in Teh-rán, a word of two syllables (not three), the aspirate at the end of the first syllable is very distinguishable. This to English organs is easy enough with a little practice; but what is more difficult to catch, is the true pronunciation of such a name as Mehr (a town lying between Tehrán and Mash-hed). This is a word of one syllable only, and the h must be well aspirated before the r. In the name Mash-hed, too, the h should be distinctly heard after the sh. The only exception to this strong aspiration of the h, is when the syllable eh or ah ends a word; e.g. in such words as kháneh, 'house,' and in past participles, as gufteh, pronounced simply khané and gufté. This syllable is often referred to as the eh obscure, and in the transliteration the h might as well be omitted. The ء is in fact only written to show that the preceding letter (otherwise the last) is pronounced with a short vowel, for the rule is that every Persian word must end with a consonant—the letters of prolongation ل, و, س being regarded as such by their Grammarians. The h of the termination eh, is therefore not to be aspirated.

The pronunciation of this obscure eh or ah varies in different words, according to the vowels that precede and follow it.

When this termination is followed by long or short a, it is sounded more like ah; Ex. goftah-am, “I have said.” But, on the other hand, they say kháneh, or khánih, “a house,” and usage alone makes the rule.

§ The letter r is strongly rolled, as in Italian, and is never slurred over as we do for example in such words as ‘are,’ ‘father.’

§ The غ (a strong guttural in Arabic) is a slight hiatus only in Persian; for instance, اب, ‘a wind,’ rhymes with our word ‘card,’ while in آب, ‘after,’ the a is doubled, and pronounced in a way that reminds one of the Edinburgh dialect, where ‘have’ becomes ‘hă-ăve.’ So, آب has not the sound of our ‘bad’ but is bă-ăd. In the transliteration, double a (e.g., baad, raaná) indicates this bleating pronunciation.

Where the ‘ain begins a syllable in the middle of a word there is a very perceptible pause in the enunciation; thus, sá-at (hour), daf-ah (a time), kal-ah (a fort), khal-at (cloak); and great care must be taken not to say da-fah and ka-lah, for in many cases it renders the word unintelligible to the illiterate native. Words like مع and شع (where there is properly no vowel between the two last consonants) present some difficulty, for they do add the very slightest of e’s or a’s, making these words something more than jam and shar, and something less than jam-a and shar-a. Still, in Persian there is very little trace of the guttural sound so notable in the Arabic خ, and to pronounce it as such is regarded as a pedantic affectation. Where the 'ain has an i for its vowel we get words like I-i-tibár. Hamzated Alif in the middle of a word has this same bleating sound, e.g. maamur (an employé), maazún (authorized).

§ In MSS. and in books lithographed in the East the dia-critical bar of ج g is always omitted. This is puzzling to the learner at first, but practice (and correction from his Munshi) soon teaches him to distinguish his g's from his k's.

§ The ڙ, which we transliterate for greater distinctness k, is a very different sound from our English k, which is the ڪ. In the vulgar pronunciation this dotted kaf is often confounded with the ghain. A common orthographical mistake is to write the latter in the place of the former, the Arabic kadir becoming ghadir (غدير): a Turkish word such as aghá (اغا or اغا) is indifferently written with either letter. The true pronunciation of this k, can only be caught orally : it is not our k, neither is it kh (except in the one word قت, often pronounced vakht) ; but it is a very hard k sound pronounced down at the back of the throat, somewhat like the ck in 'stuck,' 'plucked.' Care should be taken to pronounce such words as نقل, نقد in one syllable only, nakl, nakd—not nakél, nakéđ; it is this difficulty that turns vakt into vakht when quickly spoken. The خ when properly pronounced is a very hard Scotch r, or that letter in the French when well grasseye ; but, as before stated, it is often indistinguishable from the ڙ in the mouths of the vulgar.

§ The consonant ڙ is more v than w, or rather the true pronunciation lies somewhere, between the two. It varies too, in different words.

اول 'first' is pronounced arval, while سوار 'a rider' and جواب 'an answer' are better represented by sawwár and jawwáb; and, as a rule, where the , precedes a long ā it has more the w than the v sound.

THE VOWELS.

Modern Persian possesses eight very distinct pure vowel sounds, a, á, e, i, í, o, u, ú, and the diphthong ai and ey. The vowel sound we render by short a is in point of fact somewhere between the a in bad and the u in bud or sun. The French have a habit of pronouncing this short vowel as è, thereby giving their Persian a very Turkish accent. This should be carefully avoided.

The long á is often pronounced very broadly, like our a in 'ball:' this is a special characteristic of the Káshán dialect, and was a fashion among men of the last generation. Whether we pronounce the diphthong ey or ai is according to the word, and in different parts of Persia the same word is differently pronounced. Still, it may be said that the ey ('they') pronunciation is now the more common of the two. O represents a sound between the o in 'bold' and the ow in 'cow,' but at the present day comes much nearer to the pure vowel sound. The diphthong au, characteristic of the Arabic and Hindustani accent, is in Persian generally modified into this o sound.

Double letters, a-a, i-i, etc., are to be pronounced with a slight intervening hiatus. For further remarks on these, see the paragraph on the pronunciation of the Ain, p. xx.

ANOMALIES IN PRONUNCIATION, AND GENERAL REMARKS.

As a general rule the Persians pronounce all the letters they write, and most of the letters stand for one sound only; but since the short vowels are none of them marked, they of course cannot write all they pronounce. But l, w, y, the letters of prolongation, represent, each of them, more than one sound, and are therefore the subject of certain exceptions. When they begin syllables, and in some other cases too, these letters indicate short vowels, as noted below.

In the pronunciation great attention should be paid to making a clear distinction between the long and the short vowels. Incorrectness in this particular often leads to misunderstandings; for instance, Amádan has a totally different meaning to Amadan, and there are many similar words. Also the syllables of a word must not be run together, but be pronounced separately and distinctly, thus they say nagoft-am-ash, not nagoftamash. We must note some few words that are written with a long vowel but pronounced short, and also such anomalies as occur in the orthography may be collected together here, though they will all be mentioned subsequently at their proper places in the Vocabulary. In خود 'self,' and also as a rule in such words as خوب 'good,' خوش 'well,' etc., usage has shortened the ú into a short u or o, thus khub, khush, and certainly khud (not khúd).

In words such as خواهر, خواستن, خویش, etc., the g is completely elided in pronunciation, thus kháhar, khástan, khísh.

Note.—Verbs that make their Imperative in ú, as Bigú, 'say !' insert a y when adding any suffix, thus بگویم Bi-gú- yam, 'I may say ;' while verbs whose Imperative is in o, as Biro, 'go !' pronounce the o, as a consonant when it comes to adding suffixes, thus Biravím برویم, 'let us go.'

The ي at the beginning of a syllable is the English (consonant) y in a like position. In the middle and end of a word it marks the long i and the diphthong ai, ey. But the long i at the end of words is often pronounced exactly like the obscure eh or ih in past part., etc. Thus خیلی, بیلی, and باقی are respectively pronounced balé, khaile, and bákelé, or bákili, to rhyme with khâneh and the like. The verbal prefix می when it does not take the accent is often pronounced short—mi-ámad rather than mí-ámad. The pronominal and verbal affixes ام, اند, است, اش, اند, است, are all short—am, ast, and, ash, being in fact syllables by themselves, and only so written after the obscure eh, to mark the fact that the h is not to be aspirated.

In the dialect of Fars all á's become ú. Thus, instead of Mi-dánid, "Do you know," they say Mi-dúnid. And certain words all over Persia are pronounced colloquially after this incorrect fashion. Such are نان nún, 'bread,' and آن ún, 'that:' همان hamún for hamán is another example of this.

In some very few cases the Tenwin or nunation of the Arabs has been preserved when the word was incorporated into Persian: an instance is مثلا, pronounced masalan, not masalá; but by far the greater number of such words have dropped the n sound; Ex. حالا hálá, مرها marhabá, etc.

As regards the peculiarities in writing, it may be noted that there is a tendency to join the demonstrative pronouns to the following words; thus, فصوص, اینظرف, يکدقيقة, فراشبashi

In the same way they are wont to write

يکدقيقة, فراشبashi, etc., in one word; but it is to be understood that in every case this mode is optional. Such words as چکار, چکنم, for چه کار, چه کنم are only tolerated as colloquialisms, being in fact the Persian counterparts of such spellings as "I can't," "I wont," which would find a place in our Plays. Again, certain common words have a varying orthography not yet recognized by the dictionaries (ex. غریل), for there is no competent authority to settle the matter. When two ی's come together the first is more correctly written with a Hamzeh, and without dots, thus یاگین, 'below,' páin or páyín. As has been remarked above, let the learner especially notice the clear and emphatic way in which the Persians articulate their words. Such consonants as are reduplicated are considerably emphasized; though perhaps in this matter the Persians do not come up to the standard of the Arabs and Italians. Still, البته is very distinctly albat-tah, not albatah. Whether a sentence is interrogative or not, depends in many cases, not on the order of the words but entirely on the emphasis, and on the inflection of the voice: practise alone can insure correctness. The accent in individual words falls on the last syllable: there are a few exceptions. Thus the Izâfat (i or e marking the genitive), the ی of unity, and the affixed pronouns, do not take the accent. Ex. پدرم, پدری, پدر من, Pidar-i-man 'my father,' Pidari 'a certain father' and Pidaram 'My father' —in all of which cases the accent falls on the dar of Pidar.

In verbs the accent is on the last syllable of the root, except when the verb takes bi (of the subjunctive), na, and ma (negative), or is compounded with prepositions, etc., such as bar, báz, in which cases the accent falls on these prefixes.

Still there is great irregularity in the accentuation, it must be caught orally, and would seem to vary considerably according to the dialect of the speaker.

ON THE USE AND PRONUNCIATION OF THE IZÁFAT.

One of the minor difficulties of Persian is to know when to put in and when to leave out the Izáfat, the short i or e, connecting the substantive to its adjective, and the genitive with its governing word.

In the written character it is, with the exception of a few cases, unmarked, it being a short vowel ; but still, if it be left out in the pronunciation, the most simple sentence immediately becomes unintelligible.

A few notes on the use and pronunciation of this connecting vowel, and also (as regards the pronunciation) on the somewhat analogous long i of unity, may help to make the matter clearer ; for in the rules there is much that is common to both. We have endeavoured to mark most of the Izáfats in the text of the Play, especially in the important places, but many have been omitted towards the last Act.

Between the proper name and the title there is no Izáfat, but the Gentile, or patronymic adjective, is preceded by this e ; Ex. Hidâyat Khâne Rashtî. ‘H. Khán of Rasht.’ Also, between the proper name and the trade, etc., the Izáfat is inserted, thus Haidar-i-farrâsh, Karim-i-Mehtar, ‘H. the carpet-spreader,’ ‘K., the groom.’ Compound words formed by the juxtaposition of adjectives or nouns are not connected by the Izáfat ; thus, Khâherzan, ‘sister-in-law,’ Sar-barahnah, ‘bareheaded,’ Pur-kuvvat, ‘powerful.’ Such a word as Dar-khânih, on the other hand, is often pronounced with a slight Izáfat—Darě khânih, ‘gate-house.’ The Izáfat is marked in the writing after the short or obscure eh (of past part., etc.) by a hamzeh, thus شما 'your house;' after the long vowels l, و and i, by a ی (or more correctly 'ی) or hamzeh, thus پای شما 'your foot,' رو او 'his face.' As we have said above, the ordinary sound of the Izáfat is between that of our short i and e ('bid' and 'bed')—Pedar-e-man, or Pedar-i-man, 'My father,' but after words ending in long á, ú, i and eh (obscure) a y is inserted in the pronunciation for the sake of euphony, thus نیم تنه، روه او، صداء بلند زری، آبی، are pronounced sidá-yi buland, 'a loud voice,' rú-yi-ú, 'his face,' ním-taneh-yi zari-yi ábi, 'a gold-brocaded blue jacket.'

Words ending in h, preceded by a long vowel, simply add the i (not yi), thus يک ماه دیگر is yik máhi dígar 'one month more,' but يک ماهه دیگر yik máhí-yi dígar 'one fish more.'

THE TERMINATION I.

For the pronunciation and writing of the ی i used as a sort of article, and frequently met with in the formation of nouns and substantives, rules analogous to those given for the Izáfat are in force. Thus words ending in eh (obscure) take a hamzeh in the place of the ی i: بادیه بادیهه بزرگتر bádiyeh-i, 'a certain pot.' In writing it will be noted this is indistinguishable from the Izáfat, but its pronunciation is not the same, for we say بادیه بزرگتر bádiyeh-yi buzurgtar, 'a bigger pot' (vide supra). Note that the h in the termination eh obscure, though followed by the Izáfat or the ی i of unity, always remains entirely unaspirated, as has been already stated, p. xx.

When a word ending in l alef takes this ی i of unity etc., they generally insert another hamzated ی before the ی i to distinguish it from the Izáfat, thus ادعاٰي idde-á-i. This first hamzated ي is not pronounced, for it is to be noted that they do not say Idde-á-yí. Further remarks on the use of this ي of unity, etc., will be found below, p. xxxii.

SOME NOTES ON GRAMMATICAL PECULIARITIES AND IDIOMATIC CONSTRUCTIONS.

It is not within the scope of this Introduction to give even an outline of Persian Grammar,* for the learner is supposed to be acquainted with the very simple accidence and the ordinary syntax of that language, but a few remarks on the idioms and the use or disuse in the modern language of certain words and parts of speech may not be considered uninteresting to those who are learning the colloquial tongue. Also to group certain general remarks together here, will save repetition in the Notes of the Play, and the learner will the more easily turn to them when instances come under his notice.

A very small acquaintance with the language will bring out the fact that the Persians do not hold to great logical or grammatical accuracy in their speech. For instance, they frequently have ‘thou’ and ‘you’ mixed up in the same sentence, and plural subjects often govern singular verbs. This last is sanctioned by the grammar, especially where the subject is inanimate or irrational, but exceptions may be said to be almost the rule in this case. Many of their commonest words seem to us pleonastic (e.g. the double prepositions, az baráyi, dar zir), and they constantly put two words where the idea is clearly indicated by one, paying in such cases particular attention to the jingle of sound, thus ísh o núsh, 'joviality,' kíl o kál, and shút o shát, 'chattering.' In short, compounds of the 'shilly-shally' type are very common. Words of this kind are most frequently met with in the talk of the uneducated. For instance, the old woman in our Play uses sinn o sál (the Arabic and the Persian synonym), meaning 'year,' and fakír o fukará (the singular and plural number, in Arabic, of one and the same words), meaning 'a poor man,' as though she were thereby making her language more precise. For there is in Persian generally a great looseness of style, a state of things fostered by their idiomatic disregard for conjunctions (such as and, then, if, in order that, and the like), and the very unprecise nature of the relative pronoun.

Another point that will strike the student, who learns to talk modern Irání after studying the classical Arabic and Persian at home, is the curious selection that they have made for the words of their every day vocabulary. All their technical terms, whether theological or scientific, they have taken over bodily from the nomenclature of their masters the Arabs, for they had none of native growth. But one does not quite see why they should use Arab words for such every day substances as gold and silver (talá, nokrah), instead of keeping the excellent old Persian names (zar, sim) for these metals. Now-a-days sim, the old word for 'silver,' means 'wire;' and zar, 'gold,' is only found compounded in zargar, 'goldsmith,' and the like. Other instances might readily be collected by anyone who would take the trouble of marking them. Were they so collected and tabulated according to the nature of the object, and also the use of the words given at different epochs, it might serve to elucidate several points in the development of Moslem civilization in Persia, supplying material to the historian and the philologist in matters where, up to the present time, no data exists.

THE PLURAL OF NOUNS.

The use of the old plural in án is at the present day confined to a small number of words ; and many of these even may take há instead. In rather pompous language, however, this obsolescent plural is often used. Thus we find farzandán, ‘children ;’ nokerán, bandegán (pl. of bandeh), ‘servants ;’ pá-disháhán, ‘kings ;’ keshtibánán, ‘boatmen’—(for using this last the Persian love of alliteration would be sufficient reason) ;—buzurgán, ‘the great ;’ rástkárán, ‘the righteous.’ In short, this plural is now only used exceptionally, and in emphatic cases.

Nouns ending in eh (obscure), when taking the pl. in há, are often incorrectly written with only one a, thus خانها, دیدها, باز خواستها, but pronounced kháné-há, dídé-há, báz khásté-há.

REMARKS ON THE USE OF NOUNS AND ADJECTIVES.

As will be noted, generic substantives, nouns of multitude, and others, are as a rule used in the singular, thus harf is used where we should say ‘words ;’ so, chub, for ‘sticks ;’ kár, ‘affairs ;’ dukmah, ‘buttons ;’ amal, ‘actions,’ etc.

The Persian idiom often uses a substantive where we should put an adjective, thus they say kári mushkili, an affair of difficulty, or as we should put it, ‘a difficult matter;’ iztirâbi tamâm, the agitation of completeness, i.e. great agitation; ihtimâli kulli miravad, ‘there is every probability;’ and other examples occur almost on every page.

On the other hand adjectives are often used in the place of nouns, thus Bí-muruvat, ‘O, inhuman (one)!’ Bi-chárih, ‘O, helpless (man)!’

From all adjectives, and from some participles, abstract nouns can be formed by adding و i, thus khubí, ‘goodness,’ from khub, ‘good.’ From panjâh sâlih, ‘of fifty years old,’ comes panjâh sâligí, ‘condition of being aged fifty.’

Also by adding و i, adjectives are formed from nouns, thus zamíní, ‘terrestrial;’ yék-vajabí, ‘of one span,’ ‘insignificant;’ do dastí, ‘two handed,’ and, adverbially, ‘with two hands;’ panjâh tomání ‘(a jacket) of fifty tomâns (ten-franc pieces).’

As in English, the present and past participles are used as ordinary epithets. Also the infinitive is to be considered merely as a verbal noun. Ex. (p. 11), Man az tarsi kushteh shudan imrúz dídan-i-Nisá nayáyam, “(That) I from fear of being killed would (may) not come to-day to see Nisá?” Also (p. 11) Bírún ámadani khún hamún murdani barádaram hamún, “even with the flowing of the blood, at that time came the dying of my brother.”

In cases such as these the Persian infinitive is best translated by our participle: Bi dâd o faryâd kardan, “by screaming and howling.”

REMARKS ON THE ADVERBS.

Substantives, Adjectives, and Participles are all used adverbially, without undergoing any change. Thus, dar- mándah, ‘impotent-ly ;’ biham-zadah, ‘frustrated-ly ;’ sar-zadeh, ‘suddenly ;’ khub, ‘well ;’ sábik, ‘formerly ;’ shab o rúz, ‘by day and night.’ In such phrases as Oták kasi níst, Khánih níst, “‘There is no one (in) the room,” “‘He is not at home,” the preposition dar, ‘in,’ or the like, is understood : this omission in the colloquial language is very frequent.

REMARKS ON THE PRONOUNS.

The affixed pronouns am, at, ash, joined to nouns, verbs, etc., should be preceded by a slight pause in pronunciation, thus Goftam-at (not Gofta-mat), “I told thee.”

As has been noted above, when the word to which they are affixed ends in obscure eh, these affixes are written ام, ات, اش, (but still pronounced short, ām, āt, āsh), and when the word ends with ل ā or ، ū long they may be written يش, بیت, روش, and pronounced, for the sake of euphony, yam, yat, yash : Ex. روش rú-yash, ‘his face.’ Or it is optional to write them simply م, ت, ش, and to couple them on to the long ū or ā, without any intervening vowel : Ex. زانوم, زانوں, ‘my knee.’ Khud, ‘self,’ (pronounced short), is used for the personal pronoun of all persons. It is generally of the same person as the verb, but it is often ambiguous, and the context alone decides ; thus (p. ۱), Báyad wasaf-i-Tímúr az sar-i-khud kunad, “One must put Tímúr’s qualities out of her head.”

THE USE OF THE TERMINATION ۱ OF UNITY, &c.

The syllable ۱ added to a substantive restricts that substantive to unity ; it is also used to express analogous conditions, such as peculiarity, and the like. Thus, mardí, ‘a certain man,’ but mardí-kih, ‘the (particular) man that,’ etc.; dakí- kah-i, 'a, or one, minute;' ikhtiyári, 'some, or any, option;' torí, '(your) way,' the particular manner you have; Chih khiyálí ast, "What way of thinking is it then?"

When two substantives are coupled together, the i is only added to the last word: Ikhtiyár-o-izzati, "the (particular) power and glory."

THE USE OF ~~KIH~~ KIH OR KEH, 'THAT.'

Kih stands for the Relative Pronoun, with or without the affixed personal pronoun at the end of the clause, thus, Mardi kih dar otáki tú dídam (sometimes written in full, dídamash), "The (particular) man whom I saw in your room."

When quoting the words of another, kih introduces the ipsa verba of the parties, for the Persians always quote dramatically: Goft kih miyáyam, "He said, 'I come,'" i.e. he said he would come.

In relating an occurrence witnessed, the same use of the present tense dramatically is often found. Ex. (p. v), Dídam ham án-tor ast kih khyál kardah búdam, "I saw it was (is) even as I had imagined."

Kih is sometimes put elliptically for vaktikih, 'when.' Ex. (p. 1^r), Chúb kih khurdí, "When you have eaten the sticks (i.e. been beaten), you will understand," etc.

Kih occasionally takes the place of agar 'if' in conditional phrases: Mídáni kháhari tura kih bi Khán bidihím, "You know, if we give your sister to the Khán, then," etc. (p. 1^r).

Kih is almost always followed by the verb in the subjunctive, except where it serves to introduce the identical words of some other speaker, in dramatic narration (v. supra).

Thus (p. 1), Akl-am kabúl namikunam kih Sholih sahib-i-in búdah báshad, "My mind will not believe that Sholih has been the author of this."

Kih is used also to emphasize pronouns, etc.: Tú kih namídáni, "Don't you know?"

Kih, 'that,' introducing a subordinate clause, is very frequently omitted in the spoken language. Examples occur on every page. (p. 14), Bi-khiyálat mírasad man az tars, etc., "Does it come to your mind (do you imagine) that (understood) I from fear should do so-and-so?"

This omission occurs very regularly before the pres. subj.: Bífarmáyid bipazand, "Be pleased to command (that) they may cook it;" or, in interrogative sentences (p. 17), Taksir-i-man chih chiz ast mará mízanand, "What is my fault (for which, 'kih') they beat me?"

REMARKS ON THE VERBS.

The number of simple verbs in Persian being extremely limited, compound verbs, consisting of a noun of action and the verb kardan, or some like verb, supply the deficiency.

Any verb compounded with kardan, "to do" (or the like), when used in deferential language, may have substituted for this auxiliary either namúdan, or, more politely still, farmúdan. Thus, Ta-áruk kardan, "to make a present," Ta-áruk namúdan, "to bestow a present;" Ta-áruk farmúdan, "to honour with a gift." But, in point of practice, the distinction between such forms as these is not observed, and the first two especially are used indifferently. The number of these auxiliaries made use of by the Persian idiom for the building up of compound verbs is very large. All the simple verbs, denoting action in a general, indefinite sense—as, for example, the Persian for “to do, make, eat, suffer, have, strike, fall, come, become, bring, change, bear, show, wish, take, find,” and many more—are all in constant use for this purpose, and usage will alone determine which auxiliary is to be used.

In many cases the original meaning of the auxiliary is entirely neglected, according to our notions ;—so we have harf zadan, “to beat words, to talk ;” yád giriftan, “to seize memory, to learn,” and the like on every page ; but it is needless to multiply examples.

In all these compound verbs, the prefixes مـ, نـ, with the مـ, نـ of negation, are intercalated before the verb itself. Thus, bar mí-dárad (not mí bardárad), dast bar na midári, from bar-dáshtan, “to take away, off.”

In compound verbs the acc. or object is often inserted between the two component parts, and is then coupled up (by the Izáfat or by simple juxta-position) quite regularly to the noun part of the compound verb. This sometimes makes the sentence a little puzzling. So let the student carefully master the construction of such sentences as these :—Yád dádan, “to teach,” makes, Yád-am dád, “he taught me ;” from Fíkr ujtádan, “to cast a thought on, to pay attention to,” we get Nabá-yad kih shumá fíkri ník-námí-yi khud biyuftid, “Ought you not to pay attention to your reputation ? ” (p. rr). Again, from Bená guzárda, “to have passed the beginning of, to have already begun,” we have Bá-man bená-yi namak biharámi guzárdah ast, “He has already committed a breach of hospitality against me” (p. ۵۱).

When the verb has to be repeated in a different tense the auxiliary alone recurs; thus, Dúst dáshtah (am) va mí dáram, “I have loved and do (still) love” (p. ۵۰.).

The Persian idiom, as regards the use of the tenses, often differs from ours.

The Present tense is frequently employed where we use the Future or Imperative. Thus the Vazír says (p. ۷), Midihi bi-zargar dukmah mí-kunand, mí-dúzand, etc., “You will give (twenty-four buttons) to a goldsmith, they (shall) make them (i.e. to make), they (shall) sew them round the collar, etc. ;” (p. ۱), Bar-khízam biravam písh-i-khán, “I will get up now and go to the Khán.”

The past tense is frequently found where we use the present. Thus, Ístádah ast, “seated, or sitting ;” (p. ۶), Tú bázár ham kih rafti, “Lest when you too (have gone) go to the bazaar ;” (p. ۲۵), Man digar misli tú ham na-khástam “I have not wanted (do not want) any more a fellow like you !” (p. ۱), Man ún-kadr ahmak-am kih ínrá bávar mí kardam, “(That) I am such a fool that I should (have believed, i.e.) believe this !” Harf zadi ! “If you utter a syllable I do so and so.” “Two hours before (remaining till) sunset” is Do sá-at bi ghurúb mándah; after sunset, az ghurúb guzashtah: in either case the past participle.

When subordinate clauses are intercalated between the subject and the principal verb, such clauses have their verb in the past participle, or more rarely in the present participle. All such subordinate clauses may logically be considered as compound epithets (of the subject), just as is the case with the long involved sentences so common in German. This very idiomatic use of the past participle will present no difficulty to the reader if he will translate all these (subordinate) past participles much as he would an ablative absolute in Latin, i.e. "Having done so and so (and) having made this (and) having completed that deed, he acted (principal verb) thus."

When rendering into idiomatic English, the sentences must of course be broken up.

The present participle is, comparatively speaking, but little used; the past participle often taking its place, e.g. Istádah, 'standing,' as noted above. Wherever the present participle is used it especially calls attention to the act being continuous. As an example of this use of both the present and past participles in the subordinate clauses, let the learner turn to the Stage Directions (p. 1), beginning at the words Hájí Sálíh taazím kardah, down to Niyâh mí-kunad. It may be rendered thus:—"H. S. having bowed goes out; Zíbá having violently slammed the door . . . enters screaming and crying (present participle, continuous action). The Vazír is startled at this noise, and casts a glance in a frightened way behind him."

Examples recur on every page, and in historic narration an entire page or more may be composed with a succession of subordinate clauses, each with its past participle: then, at the end of all things, and far removed from its subject, comes the one principal verb.

The subjunctive mood is more frequently used in the Persian idiom than is the case with us, as the following instances of its employment indicate :—

It should be born in mind throughout that the imperfect indicative takes the place of the imperfect subjunctive, and in that position often has the force of the pluperf. subjunctive. The future indicative too stands for the future subjunctive. The verbs Khástan ‘to wish’ Báyistan, Sháyistan ‘to be proper,’ ‘fitting,’ and Tavánistan ‘to be able’ may be followed by the shortened form of the infinitive : Ex. Na mí taván shumá rá díd, “It is impossible to see you:” díd for dilan, Chih báyad kard, “What must be done?” kard for kardan. But these verbs, too, are more generally constructed with the subjunctive preceded by kih (or that particle understood). Na mí shavad kih bikharam, “Is it not better that I should buy?” etc. (p. 16).

Where in English the second of two verbs is put in the infinitive the Persians use the present subjunctive—Mí-kháham biravam, “I wish to go;” and this even when the first verb is in the past tense: (Past) Didam giriftam-ash, (Present) bar-daram biyávaram, “I saw and seized him, to take him up and bring him,” etc. (p. 11). The perf. subj. is sometimes used, but more rarely : (p. 1), Kabúl na mí ku-nam kih Sholih sáhibi ín búdah báshad, “I cannot conclude that Sholeh has been the author of this;” (p. 15), Pushti-pardah raftah-and ham ísh o nísh kardah báshand, “They went behind the curtain that they might still continue their delights.”

Conditional sentences are introduced by the preposition agar, 'if' followed by the subjunctive, or that preposition may be understood, in which case the verb is still put in the subjunctive. Ex.: (p. 1), Aib na dárad kadri gushád bidúzand, "No matter (if) they do make it a little too wide." (p. 1), Unjá kih bidíham bidúzand, "If I give it to be made up there :"—where ' kih' takes the place of ' agar.'

As mentioned above the imperfect indicative takes the place of the imperf. subjunctive : (p. 1), Agar andázah maalum míshud, "If the size were known;" Agar míkhástam, "If I wished."

As is the case in the indicative, the pres. subj. is often used where we use the future (see p. xxxvi.) : Bi khiyálat mi-rasad, man imrúz didan-i-Nisá nayáyam (p. 1), "(Did or) do you imagine I should (literally, may) not come to-day to see Nisá?"

Further instances of the idiomatic use of the subjunctive in conditional clauses, and also the sequence of the tenses in Persian, will be seen from the following examples. They are recommended to the student's careful perusal :—

Present subjunctive : (p. 1), Bigíram izáfah-yi-kharj ast, "If I get it, it is an increase of expense."

Subjunctive (and indicative) past : Agar khildáf arz kardah básham, namaki tú kír am kunad (p. rr), "If I have petitioned unjustly, may your salt blind me!" Va illá bá Tímúr kushtí mi-giriftam zaminash mízadam mídídi (p. rr), "Still, if I were wrestling (or to wrestle, imp. ind.) with Tímúr, you would see (imp. ind.) that I should throw him (imp. ind.)." Balkih mí-uftád mí-murd rúzigar-i-mádar-ash siyáh mí-shud (p. rr), "If perchance he had fallen and died, his mother's days would have become black." (The imperf.

ind. after ‘Balkih,’ with the meaning of the pluperfect.) Agar písh-i-man mí-ámad mará bá ú yakjá mídídí (p. ۱۱), “If he had come to see me, you would have seen him and me together in one place.” Magar tavánistam bírún nayámadam (p. ۱۱), “But if I had been able, should I not have come out? (don’t you fancy?).” Raftam bi bínam chih kháhand kard, “I went to see what they would (lit. will) do (p. ۱۰).

In concluding these scanty notes on the various idiomatic sentences, we would fain recommend the subject of Persian Syntax to Students, for no exhaustive study has ever yet been made of its rules. The Persians themselves consider the matter as rather beneath the dignity of those acquainted with the niceties of Arabic Grammar; but, nevertheless, the matter is one that deserves a far more complete examination than any that it has hitherto had at the hands of the learned.

ACT I.^r

[The scene is laid at the town of Lankurán, on the shores of the Caspian, some fifty years ago, in the house of Mirzá Habíb, the Vazír. The Vazír is seated in a room at the entrance of his harem, and Hájí Sálih is standing before him.]

Vazír. Hájí Sálih, I have heard you are going to Rasht.¹
Is that true ?

Hájí Sálih. Yes, sir; I am going there.

Vazír. Hájí Sálih, I would confide a certain service to you. You must carry it out for me. It was on this account I sent for you.

Hájí Sálih. Be pleased to command, sir. I am ready, with life and heart, to carry out the orders of Your Excellency.

Vazír. Well Hájí, you must get a blue gold-embroidered jacket made in Rasht;² and the like of it they must never have seen to this day in Lankurán ! When the jacket is ready, you get a goldsmith to make twenty-four gold buttons—smaller than a hen's egg, bigger than a pigeon's,—let them be sewn round the collar of the jacket.³ At the time of your coming back bring it with you : and here are fifty pieces of gold.

[He puts the coins, wrapped up in paper, before him.]

Pay for it all : whatever may be wanting,⁴ when you return here it shall be settled. Are you coming back quickly, or not ?

Hájí Sálih. In another month I shall be back ; I have no business to transact.¹ I am taking ready money to buy silk with, then I return. But, sir, if the size of the jacket were known, it were better ; for when² they sew it there in Rasht, maybe it will come too narrow or too broad, or be too long or too short, and then I shall have been deficient in the service of Your Excellency.

Vazír. No matter if³ they do make it a little too broad or too long. If the size does not come right,⁴ they can set it straight here.

Hájí Sálih. Will it not do, sir, if I buy the cloth, and then have the buttons made and bring them here ? Whoever may be going to wear it, let them cut it out here and make it up according to the size of her figure.

Vazír. Oh, you men ! you have all of you got a curious habit of over-talking, and making a display of your knowledge ! So your intention is that⁵ I should tell you clearly all about this private affair ! Don't you know, if I give that jacket to be cut out and made up here, what a questioning and gossiping I shall happen upon ? and what bitter times I shall have of it ? °

Hájí Sálih. No, sir ; what do I know about it ?

Vazír. Then I must perforce make you acquainted with the matter beforehand, lest when you now go⁶ to the bazaar, and meet somebody, you spread about that the Vazír has confided to you such and such a service, making peace impossible to us, and not allowing of our sitting down in quiet. My good friend, the matter is this : In two months it will be New-Year's Day,⁷ and I want to give a present of something rare to Sholih Khánúm on the festival. Now, if I give the thing to be made up here, Zíbá Khánúm, too, will want something of the same kind.¹ If I get it, my expenditure is increased, and it does not tend to her adornment ; if I do not get it, I shall never be free from her jabber and talk, and my every day's bread will be a cause of headache and bitter times.

Hájí Sálih. But when you present the jacket,² sir, will not Zíbá Khánúm want another like it ?

Vazír. Great Allah ! in what strange straits do we fall !³ You mannikin ! what affair is it of your's ? You go and attend to whatever people tell you to do ! At the time of giving it I shall say, that my sister, the wife of Hidâyat Khán of Rasht, has sent this jacket as a present to Sholih Khánúm. Zíbá Khánúm can't then reproach me with neglect. But you will not mention a syllable of my words to any one here, eh ?⁴

Hájí Sálih. No, indeed, sir ; what affair is it of mine to divulge your secrets ? Is that worthy of my beard ?⁵

Vazír. Allah bless you ! Go ! be off with you ! you are dismissed !

[Hájí Sálih having made his obeisance goes out of the room.

*When his back is turned, Zíbá Khánúm suddenly, and with both her hands, throws open the other door of the room, and comes in crying and screaming. The Vazir, startled by this noise, looks in a frightened way behind him.]*⁶

Zíbá Khánúm. So you were giving orders for a jacket with a gold-buttoned collar, for your favourite wife ! Allah bless your manliness ! And you are going to say, " My sister, Hidâyat Khán's wife, has sent this as a present to Sholih Khánúm?" Allah bless you! So, would you tell me this about your sister!—about your sister!—who in miserliness is the equal of the Isfahání merchants,¹—putting her cheese into a bottle and rubbing her bread against the outside of the glass only! And now it comes to pass that she sends a jacket worth some fifty or sixty tománs, as a present to your wife! That is to say, I am such a fool that I should have believed this!²

Vazír. Woman, you frighten me! What are you talking about? What present? what jacket? Are you gone mad?³

Zibá Khánúm. Don't make a pretence! don't turn your tongue round!⁴ The words that you spoke to Hájí Sálib, I heard them all, letter by letter, to the very end.⁵ When you sent for Hájí Sálib I understood it at the very time—it impressed my mind: I came softly and stood behind that door there of the room;⁶ I listened, I saw that it was even as I had imagined. May Allah make that jacket with gold buttons on the collar a lucky one for your favourite wife! Won't Tímúr Áká's eyes brighten!⁷ The order has gone out for a new jacket for his favourite! She will put it on and coquette about before his eyes!

Vazír. You little old woman, why do you talk nonsense? For how much longer are you not going to use self-restraint in your improper talk? Have you no shame? Before my very face you throw slander on my family! You give my reputation to the wind! A sense of propriety is a good thing in the world!⁸ Is this not a shame!

Zibá Khánúm. Well! If I had wanted to give your good name to the wind, I should have taken in hand one of these good-looking, pretty young fellows, and made love to him.¹ It is your favourite wife who gives your good name to the wind, who by day and by night has her arm round Tímúr Áká's neck. How many times has my maid not seen this with her own eyes ?

Vazír. [his colour going.] I never believe either your word or your maid's. ^

Zibá Khánum. We don't say it alone ; everybody in Lankurán knows about this affair. They say that you have closed your eyes, and, like the² partridge, have put your head under the snow ;—that you do not understand what is to your happiness or to your sorrow, and that you imagine other people do not understand either !

Vazír. What words are these you say ?³ What does Sholih know about Tímúr Áká ? Where has she seen him ?

Zibá Khánum. You yourself pointed him out ; you yourself showed him to her.

Vazír [at the top of his voice]. I showed him to her ? I pointed him out ?

Zibá Khánum. Yes, indeed, you pointed him out ; did I then point him out, do you think ? Was it not you who came on the feast-day at the end of the Month of Fasting,⁴ and said to your favourite wife, “The Khán is going to let the young nobles wrestle out by the ramparts, so you come, and Nisá Khánum too, with the maid, and the chamberlain : have a carpet spread on the path under the fort wall, to sit there and look on at the sight.” And they all set out and went there. There, Tímúr Áká, in the flower of his youth, five-and-twenty years old, handsome and powerful, threw all the young nobles :⁵ and Sholih Khánum, not with one heart,⁶ but with a thousand hearts, fell in love and was captivated by him. For the rest, who knows by what trick she got into communication with him? And now, if she does not see him¹ for a day, she has no rest. Did I not tell you that, with your age and years, a youthful girl was not a fit wife for you? You would not listen to my words! Now this is your punishment, so endure it!¹

Vazír. Very good! Go, be off with you. It is enough! I have heard sufficient. Leave me alone, I have got work to do.

Zíbá Khánum [going off muttering,² says under her breath], Why should I be off? Let your favourite take herself off, and her paramour too. But such as they, are just good enough for you!

Vazír [alone]. My mind will not believe that Sholih Khánum has perpetrated³ this action. But it is very possible that having seen Tímúr Áká's strength and manliness, she was delighted by it; and the silly child has thoughtlessly praised him to this one and that, then the old woman, from envy, ascribes her words to being in love, and would dig a snare for her. Anyhow, it will be as well to rid Sholih of this idea,⁴ and in some way persuade her that Tímúr Áká is not so powerful as all that. Those whom he threw to the ground were but puny boys! Maybe by this plan I can put Tímúr Áká's good qualities out of her head, and so she won't bring him⁵ any more on her tongue. I will get up and go before the Khán;¹ then, after that, I will return, to come and go to her room and see what I can do.

[He gets up to go.]

Zíbá Khánum [coming in]. Be pleased to command what you desire for breakfast and dinner to-day, that they may cook it.

Vazír. You have given me such thorns and snake venom already to eat, that if I do not eat again for another month I shall still be satisfied !

[He is about to go out. In the middle of the room a sieve has fallen down ; lost in thought, he goes¹ on with his eyes towards the door and puts his foot on the edge of the rim of the sieve, when, the other rim springing up, his knee gets a blow. Then, holding his knee, and with a livid face, he sits down yelling at his wife.]

Akh! I am killed ! What is this sieve doing here ? O ! sons of burnt fathers !²

Zíbi Khánúm [in astonishment]. What do I know about it ! How can I tell you what the sieve is doing here ? Every time you come here you bring us abuse and discord. A certain other person may wear a jacket—we, only get your abuse !³

Vazír. Farrásh !

[Haydar, the farrásh, coming from the passage into the room, crosses his arms over his chest, and bows. Zíbá Khánúm covers her face, and goes into the corner of the room.⁴]

Vazír [in a rage]. Haydar, what is this sieve doing in the middle of the room ?⁵

Haydar, the farrásh. Sir ! at early dawn I was sweeping the room, when Karím the groom came in here, with a sieve in his hand ;⁶ he said a few words, turned and went off again. It is evident that he went away and left his sieve here.

Vazír. Call that rascally groom. Let me see to it ! [the farrásh goes off after the groom]. Great Allah ! what business has a groom in my room ? what is a sieve doing inside my room ? To-day bitter times come on me from all sides !

Every time that I come into this infernal room I never can go out of it without some mischance.

Zibá Khánum. Of course, because Sholih Khánum is not here! Now that being so, why do you come here any more? Always go to Sholih Khánum's room!

[The farrásh and the groom come in.]

Vazír [in a perfect rage]. Karím, you boy! what business have you in my room? your place is the stable! How dare you set foot in my room? you son of a burnt father!

Groom. I had come here but for a moment, sir, to ask Haydar¹ if you would ride to-day. I asked, and went out again immediately.

Vazír. Then why did you go off and drop this sieve here?¹

Groom. I'd got the sieve in my hand for cleaning the horses' barley with, and giving it to them. I was forgetful—it must have remained here.

Vazír. Then why did you not come back and fetch it?

Groom. It never came to my mind that it had been left here, but from that time to this I have been going about after that sieve.

Vazír [to the groom, and afterwards to the farrásh]. Where was your recollection then, you base born! Haydar, call Áká Bashír, the steward—let him come here at once; bring with you, too, the sticks and the pole.² And tell three farráshes to come in here from outside.

[The farrásh goes out.]

Groom [begins to tremble, and says, weeping], Be pleased to forgive me, sir, by the Khán's head!³

Vazír [in a voice suppressed from rage]. Stop your breath, you son of a dog!

Groom [blubbering]. O, may I be your sacrifice,¹ sir ! I have done wrong, but I have eaten dirt ! By your father's tomb, forgive me ! I have done wrong, I and my father, and my mother too ! Never again will I set foot in here !

Vazír. Be strangled, you son of an ass !

[At this moment Áká Bashír the steward, Haydar the farrásh, with a bundle of sticks under his arm, and also three other farráshes, come in and bow.] ¹¹

Vazír [to the farráshes]. Throw down the steward, and put his feet on the pole.

[The farráshes throw down the steward, arrange the noose, and make fast his feet to the pole; then two of them hold the pole, and two pick up the sticks.]

Vazír. Strike.

[The fárráshes begin to beat.]

Steward. O sir ! my life !² May I be the protection of your head ! What is my fault, for which they are beating me ?

Vazír [in a rage, pointing]. What is this sieve doing in my room ?

Steward. What sieve, sir ?

Vazír. When you have received the sticks you will understand what sieve.

[The farráshes go on beating him.]

Steward, O mercy ! oh justice ! oh, may I be the protection of your head ! After all, sir, tell me what my crime is. O may I be your sacrifice ! Be pleased to tell me my crime :³ after that, if you wish to kill me, you can.

Vazír [to the farráshes]. Hold hard ! Áká Bashír, your fault is this. The duty of the gate-house servants you have not made clear to them ; and it is your business to look after every one who does service at the gate-house.⁴ The supervision lies with you. You yourself must tell each one his place, and every one his business ;¹¹² explain it to him and make him understand it. The groom must not set foot in any place excepting in his stable. A sieve must never be dropped in my room. To-day Karím the groom, with a sieve in his hand, comes into my room, leaves the sieve here and goes out. By inadvertence I put my foot on the corner of its rim ; the other edge jumps up and hits my knee, so that even now I can't move my leg from the pain of it. I carry on the government of a great province, and manage its affairs, and you, you stupid donkey ! cannot you manage one house and the servants of the house ?

Steward. God, sir, has created your understanding and intelligence great ! but I, how can I become like you ?

Vazír [to the farráshes.] Beat !

Steward. By your head's sacrifice, sir, grant me pardon this time ! never again shall such an accident occur !

Vazír. Very well, now that he has promised, let him loose, it is enough. Áká Bashír, this time I have excused you ; but if, after this, a second time a sieve is seen in my room, consider yourself as killed !¹¹³

Steward [who has got up]. Ah, yes, on that let your mind be easy

Vazír. Be off with you !

Groom [aside]. Thanks be to God !

[Picking up the sieve, he runs off before them all, and the rest follow after him. The curtain falls.]

ACT II.¹¹

[Which takes place in Sholih Khánúm's room.]

Tímúr Áká [who is standing facing Nisá Khánúm]. Say, let us see what is to be done. What sort of notion is this that has come to the Vazír?¹ Am I then dead, that he can give you to another? What advantage will he gain by being connected with the Khán?

Nisá Khánúm. But don't you know the advantage that it will be to him? The advantage of independence, of power, and of honour!

Tímúr Áká. But the authority and power that the Khán has already given him, is that not enough for him?

Nisá Khánúm. It may be enough for him, but others hold him insecure. He intends, by means of the alliance, that his authority and power shall be lasting.

Tímúr Áká. He is a strange fool! One would say that he had not seen with his own eyes the Khán's manners with his relatives. However, in some way, we must seek to mend the matter.² Till now, you have needlessly hindered me from informing him about it all.^{1*} To-morrow I will send a man to him to tell him, so that he may give up these unattainable aims of his. And if he will not, why, he can't see his own interests.

Nisá Khánúm. O, for mercy's sake, my dearest Áká, give up this notion. It is impossible ever to tell this affair of ours to the Vazír ; for, for ever so long he has been saying, "The Khán is looking out for a pretext to kill Tímúr Áká," and I myself know that in this particular the Khán has repeatedly taken counsel with the Vazír. If the Vazír but knows of the affection between us, for his own good and his own interests, in that same hour will he go to the Khán and tell him, that you have fixed your eyes on his betrothed. More particularly as the Vazír is himself, too, very angry with you.

Tímúr Áká. Is it not enough for the Khán to have confiscated my father's province and the Khánate, but that he must set about attempting to kill me as well ? He has got most impracticable notions !

Nisá Khánum. Why, yes ; he considers you as an obstruction to his affairs. As I have often heard, he is afraid that some time you will lay claim to your father's province. In the presence of the people he is obliged to be civil to you, but if he gets an opportunity he will not leave you alive a day.

Tímúr Áká. Kháns like him will never be able to kill me !¹ The greater part of the people and all the nobles have hearty devotion to me, for the sake of my father's good deeds. I am not a chicken, whose flesh they can eat ! Well, but tell me this : What have I done to the Vazír, that he should be angry with me ?

Nisá Khámum. Why you have brought into your service¹ Mirzá Salím, son of the late Vazír. The Vazír imagines that if any power ever falls into your hands, without further words, Mirzá Salím too, being advanced, will get his father's place ; and now his thought is² to persuade the Khán to banish him out of the province.

Timúr Áká. It is not at his word that the Khán will banish¹ my secretary ! May my father's salt blind him for his bad intentions regarding me ! But, please Allah, I will attain my own purpose in spite of all his arrangements.² Still, you are right in saying that, as yet, the Vazír must know nothing about our affection. Where is Sholih Khánúm ? I had a few words to say to her.

Nisá Khánúm. She is in my mother's room.

Timúr Áká. Could not you go and call her in here ?

Nisá Khánúm. My mother is not in the house. Let us both go there to her.³

Timúr Áká. Very well ; let us go there together.

[They both go off—then]

Zíbá Khánúm [coming into the room]. Ah, you trollop ! so you have at last brought your business to such a pass, that you abuse my maid and set her against me !³ Has the Vazír then turned your head to such an extent as all that ? [She sees that there is nobody in the room, looking about here and there.] Ah ! just see where this wench has again gone off to ! May ruin fall on the house of the Vazír,⁴ who now has brought me at last to such evil days ! [She is about to go out again, when, hearing a man's voice, she begins to tremble, and sits down.]⁵ O, woe ! there comes the voice of a strange man ! O, woe is me ! Now he will be in through the door ! What shall I do ? I can't go out ! O, woe is me ! What dust do I pour on my head !⁶

[She wanders about here and there, and at last goes behind a curtain⁷ and is hidden ; after which, Timúr Áká and Sholih Khánúm enter.]

Timúr Áká. How soon your mother came back from the bath !⁸ It did not allow us to have any talk in her room, for there was no time for it there. I had so much to say !

Is it possible that the Vazír can come on us here ?

Sholih Khánúm. Make your mind easy, the Vazír can not come to these rooms to-day.

Tímúr Áká. Why can't he ?

Sholih Khánúm. Why, because to-day is the turn of Zíbá Khánúm's room ;¹ and, from fear of her gibble-gabble and scolding, he would not dare come here.

Tímúr Áká. These words of yours are all very well, but relying simply on this, one must not make one's mind so easy, nor give up taking some precautions. Moreover, once upon a time he did suddenly come in here.

Sholih Khánúm. Rest easy ; I told Nisú Khánúm² to sit in the passage, and if the Vazír should appear³ to come quickly and tell us. But are you afraid ?

Tímúr Áká. No ; why should I fear ? Of whom can I be afraid ? I am not one of those sort of men, that I should fear anybody ! But, for many reasons, I do not wish the Vazír to see me here, and then go and tell the Khán of it, for I have many plans that I must carry out before that.

Sholih Khánúm. Of course, the Vazír must know nothing of this business, otherwise he tells the Khán ; and, in that case, why, "bring up the donkey and load on the beans !" ⁴

[At this moment Nisá Khánúm, putting her head into the room]—

O, mercy on us ! the Vazír has come !

Sholih Khánúm [agitated, goes to the door and looks out].
O, mercy ! the Vazír is coming straight towards our door.

But, Tímúr Áká, there is no other place for you to go to, nor anywhere where you can remain !¹

Tímúr Áká. Then what is to be done ? what must I do ? Perhaps ^{rr} some one may have told him of my being here. By Allah, who ever has told him of my coming here, I'll make a dog's dinner of him with this dagger.³ [He puts his hand on his dagger.]

Sholih Khánúm. O, my dear fellow, now is not a time for talking. Come ! go behind this curtain ; I will see if I can get rid of him somehow.

[Confused and disconcerted, he goes behind the curtain.] ³

Vazír [enters the room, limping]. Sholih Khánúm, how are you occupying yourself ? Is your health well ?

Sholih Khánúm. Praise be to Allah ! from the auspicious condition of your head, my health is ever good.⁴ How is your health ? A thing to be wondered at is that Your Excellency should be here to-day. But how is it that you limp so ? why is your eyebrow so frowning ? May Allah vouchsafe no evil !

Vazír. Ach ! To-day a business has come upon my head, about which neither speak nor ask. Such a mishap I should never have imagined possible : my times are bitter as a dog's. Áká Masúd, go, make a cup of coffee and bring it.

[Masúd, the chamberlain, bows and goes off.]

Sholih Khánúm. Be pleased to be seated : and now tell me what has befallen you ! or, no, to tell it will take too long, perhaps, or it may be a cause of annoyance to you ? rr

Vazír. No, it is not too long. It was this : I was sitting in the presence of the Khán, with several of the nobles, and the conversation was about Tímúr Áká's strength. They all said that in the whole of Lankurán there was no one who came up to Tímúr Áká in force ; the Khán, too, affirmed it. I denied it. I said, "Tímúr Áká is not powerful, even though he did throw some people on the feast day, at the end of the month of fasting, but they were all mere boys."¹ Tímúr Áká was standing in the presence, and the Khán, not agreeing with my words, said, "With what proof will you support your assertion ?" I answered, "Although it is not befitting my rank, still, even in my fiftieth year, if I were wrestling with Tímúr Áká, you would see that I should throw him to the ground."² Then the Khán, who is always fond of this sort of business, commanded that then and there I should wrestle with Tímúr Áká, and so I, seeing no help for it, stood up. We joined hands ; emulation brought me strength ; and a minute had not passed before I had got Tímúr Áká over the thigh : more, I know not how I threw him to the ground,—but the poor boy fell senseless, and lay there spread out upon the floor, so much so, that half-an-hour after only did he come to himself. In the effort the bone of my back has got sprained, and it hurts me excessively ; and it is because of that I cannot walk straight now."³ Sholih Khánum [beginning to laugh]. O, my darling man, what is this that you have been doing ? If, perchance, this other man's son³ had fallen and died, his mother's life would have been darkened.

Vazír. Yes, I myself was very vexed at it, but what is the use ? it all happened as I tell you.

Sholih Khánum. Well ! so then, he remained helpless there on the ground, while you got up and came to show me your prowess ?

Vazír. No, the farráshes took him by the shoulders and carried him off to his mother.

[At these words Tímúr Áká, unable to contain himself with laughter, bursts out. The Vazír gets up quickly, goes and lifts up the curtain, sees Zibá Khánum and Tímúr Áká behind the curtain, and is struck dumb with amazement. Sholih Khánum, on the other hand is astonished at the sight of Zibá Khánum.]

Vazír. Gracious Allah ! what state of affairs is this now ? [Turning towards Tímúr Áká, he shouts out] You, sir ! what are you doing here ? [Tímúr Áká hangs his head down. The Vazír again]. After all, say, let me see ! Where have you been ? what place is this here ? what were you doing here ? what was your business ?

[Tímúr Áká gives no answer, but comes out from behind the curtain, and, with his head hanging down, is about to go off].

Vazír [seizing his arm]. I don't mean to let you go till you say what you were doing here, so speak ! ^{re}

Tímúr Áká [shaking his arm]. Leave go !

Vazír [clinging tighter to it]. Impossible ! I don't let you go till you give me an answer.

[Tímúr Áká, being put to it, with one hand at the nape of the Vazír's neck, and the other seizing him by the trowsers, he raises him off the floor and flings him into the middle of the room, sprawling him out like a bundle of clothes,— then, swiftly jumping out at the door, he goes off.]¹

Vazír [coming to himself after a moment, turns towards Zibá Khánum]. Ah, you slut ! what calamity is this you have brought on my head ?

Zibá Khánum. But have I brought it on your head ? what have I got to do with it ? But still, you poor helpless one, where could you, after all, get your information from ?

Vazír [in a rage]. Hold your tongue, you jade ! don't you gabble on ! I know you now. All those slanders are what you yourself have been doing.¹ Please Allah, I will serve you out.

Zíbá Khánúm. O hapless one ! Well now, tell me ! let me see ! for what would you serve me out ? Have I broken the law ? have I taken a lover ? have I gone to another's house ? have I stolen ? have I committed sin ? what have I done ?

Vazír. You trollop ! Now what would you do worse than this ? when I myself have seen you behind a curtain with a thick-necked brute like that !²

Zíbá Khánúm. O helpless one ! inquire of your wife, Sholih Khánúm, what was a strange man doing in her room ?

Vazír. You harridan ! you yourself first answer me : what were you doing with an unlawful man³ behind a curtain ?

Zíbá Khánúm. Very well ; first I will speak, then let her speak ;—we shall see what she will say. Your wife, Sholih Khánúm, had abused my maid, and I had come to ask of her, “why do you not stretch out your foot according to the size of your carpet ? My maid does not eat your bread : why do you abuse her ?” I came and saw that she was not here, I was just going away, when I saw Sholih Khánúm in conversation with a man, coming from that direction, with her face towards this room. I was at a loss what to do ; I could not go out, so I went behind the curtain, to hide and see what these would do, and afterwards tell you, more especially, since my head being bare, I could not remain with uncovered face before an unlawful man. It so happened that you arrived. When you got near, he too seeing no help for it, and, wishing to hide his face from you, came behind the curtain, to hide there till you should go off.

Vazír. If you are telling the truth, why did you not then and there come out and tell me about it ? ¹

Zíbá Khánum. But if I had been able, should I not have come out ? But he said, " You utter a word, and I strike this dagger up to the hilt in your heart ! "

Vazír [perplexed, turns round to Sholih Khánum]. Sholih, tell the truth about it : had this man come to see you ?

Sholih Khánum. This wife of yours, like any parrot, has got a habit of loose talk, jabbering and lying ! ¹ I never saw that mannikin, and I do not know him.

Vazír. What ! don't you know—have not you seen Tímúr Áká ? You know him very well.

Sholih Khánum. But what could Tímúr Áká be doing here ? Did not you throw Tímur Áká to the ground, and send him off to his mother ? ²

Vazír. Go to ! you meddle with what is no affair of yours ! You answer me my question. So, after what you have admitted, Tímúr Áká had come to see you ?

Sholih Khánum. No, pardon me, if Tímúr Áká had come to see me, you would have seen him and me together in one place. Zíbá Khánum knew I had gone to the bath to-day : ³ she thought my room would happen to be empty, and she wanted to bring her lover in here and occupy herself with passing a pleasant time. For, seeing that to-day it was the turn for Your Excellency to go to her apartments, she could not take him to her own chamber. It so happened that there was no water in the bath, therefore [“] we turned back, without further thought, and came home. But arriving unannounced, they could not go out before our faces ; so they both went behind the curtain, that they might continue their joys and sweets, and hide there together till such times as I should go to some place outside,¹ and they get an opportunity of going away. This is the truth of it. Collect the thoughts in your head, and do not be deceived by the tricks of this shameless woman, nor unjustly have bad opinions about me.

Zibá Khánum [screaming at Sholih Khánum]. O, you wicked woman ! What speeches are these that you are concocting ? You put your own acts on my head !² Woe ! woe ! By Allah, I will kill myself !

Sholih Khánum. You are a wicked woman yourself, and a slut too ! Kill yourself, or not, as you like !³ These tricks of yours are known to all the people of Lankurán. By screaming and howling you can't any longer make yourself out a respectable woman ! Your husband has eyes ! He can see if this business is your affair, or my affair.

Zibá Khánum. O, justice ! mercy ! O Allah ! I will kill myself ! O, man, why do you not strike on the mouth⁴ this shameless woman who prepares such a calumny against me ? You, too, are standing there and looking at this spectacle ! [“]

Sholih Khánum. O you jade ! why should he strike me on the mouth ? If he be a man he should tear you bit by bit, who were caught in a place alone with a strange youth !

Vazír [to Zibá Khánum]. To be sure, one ought to tear you to pieces ! Now, only give me a moment till I can get myself to the Khán, and I will settle the affairs of your lover ; and after that I will take some thought in the matter of yourself. You have spent all your life in telling fibs and lying ! I know you well !

Zibá Khánúm [in a rage]. Quite right ! I am a liar ; but, please Allah ! all of you are tellers of the truth ! Just as is very clear from that story about yourself that you related !

Vazír. Get you gone from out of my sight, you slut !

[Zibá Khánúm leaves the room.] Sholih, tell the truth about it. Come, now ! do you know anything about this matter or not ?

Sholih Khánúm. By your death¹ I swear that in this matter in no kind of way have I done wrong.

[At this moment Masúd, the Chamberlain, having brought in the coffee and poured it into a cup behind the Vazír's back, says,—]

Be pleased to command, sir, when you wish the coffee.

Vazír [turning round and striking the cup with his hand, spills the coffee over Masúd, the Chamberlain's head]. Be off with you, you half-burnt ass !² At a time like this, when my mind is so disturbed,³ is this a moment for drinking coffee ? Well now I am off to the presence of the Khán, and then it shall all be cleared up. [Masúd, the Chamberlain, has retired behind, and is going to wipe from his clothes the coffee spilt on them]. Vazír [being quite upset]. Go! quick ! and order them to give me my red horse, and let them saddle my chestnut cloak, and bring it out, sharp !³

Aká Masúd. Yes ! yes, sir ! on my eyes !⁴ I am going to get them ready immediately, exactly as you have ordered.

[After this the Vazír goes out.]

Sholih Khánúm. Great Allah ! we have gone through a strange affair ! But I have saved myself ! Thanks be to Allah ! [While she is speaking Nisá Khánúm arrives : she turns to Nisá Khánúm.] Nisá, a strange affair has happened. Have you heard nothing of it ? The Vazír found Tímúr Áká with Zíbá Khánúm behind the curtain !

Nisá Khánúm. Can that be true ? What are you saying ? What was Zíbá Khánúm doing behind the curtain ?

Sholih Khánúm. I do not know when the jade came in here and went behind there,¹ but it was the saving of my life ! Still the Khán will kill Tímúr Áká without either a doubt or a delay, and I do not know what ought to be done to help to save him.²

Nisá Khánúm. Do not be afraid, the Khán cannot put Tímúr Áká to death. But it ought never to have fallen out in this way. Now that it has all happened, the matter will be a long one. Dearest, mother wants you : let us go to her room, and send Áká Masúd to the gate-house to bring us news about it all.³

[They both go off. The curtain falls.]

ACT III.^{¶1}

[The scene is laid at the court-house of the Khán of Lankurán, by the sea shore. The Khán is seated on a throne placed forward under the Tálár.¹ Salím Beg, the Master of the Ceremonies, with a wand in his hand, is standing in the presence of the Khán; and on either side the nobles and officials of Lankurán are drawn up in line. Samad Beg, the chief farrásh, and Azíz Áká, the Khán's head-servant, together with three or four more body servants, are seated at the door;² and below the Tálár the petitioners, near Kadir Beg, the Deputy Master of the Ceremonies, are waiting the summons. The farráshes are grouped behind the door, down below the Tálár.]

Khán. To-day the air has become very pleasant. After the court I should wish to go out for a little on the sea, that my heart may be expanded. Azíz Áká, give orders to the boatmen to have the boat ready by the sea-shore.

Azíz Áká. On my eyes be it!

[He goes out.]

Khán. Salím Beg, tell them to bring the petitioners into the presence.^{¶¶}

The Master of the Ceremonies [from inside the Tálár].
Kadir Beg, bring forward the petitioners in turn.
 [Kadir Beg brings up two men—the plaintiff and the defendant—and bows.]

Petitioner [the plaintiff]. Khán, may I become your sacrifice ! I have a petition.

Khán. Speak ! let me see, fellow, what petition you have !

Plaintiff. Khán, may I become your sacrifice ! To-day I had taken my horse to the river to give him water. The horse got loose from my hand, and went off. This man was coming up in front : I called to him, "O man ! by Allah's heart, turn this horse !" He stooped down, picked up a stone off the ground and threw it in the direction of the horse. The stone hit the horse's right eye and blinded it. The horse now has become useless, and can do no more work for me. I want compensation for my horse ; he will not give it, but disputes with me about it.

Khán [to the Defendant]. Is this so, fellow ?

The Defendant. May I be your sacrifice, it is so, only I did not throw the stone on purpose.

Khán. Do not talk nonsense ; if it was not on purpose, how could a stone be picked up and thrown ?¹ Have you, too, got a horse ?

Defendant. I have : may I be your sacrifice !²

Khán [to the Plaintiff]. Then you man, you go and strike the eye of this man's horse, too, and blind it. "A tooth with a tooth, an eye with an eye, and for wounds retaliation."³ This is not a difficult business. Samad Beg, send off a farrásh, let him go and stay there while that man takes his retaliation. [Samad Beg makes his bow, comes down,³ gives them over to a farrásh, and goes back again.]

Khán. Salím Beg, say that if there are any more petitioners let them come forward. Be quick, for I want to go out for a sail to-day.

Salím Beg. Kadír Beg, if you have any other petitioner bring him forward.

[Kadír Beg brings forward two more individuals.]

Khán. O Power ! is there anything in the world more troublesome than thou ? The people are all of them thinking and taking care of their own ease, while I must always be taking thought for thousands of thousands of people, and keep myself informed of the pains of their hearts. From the first day of my rule to this day, I have never turned away a single petitioner from my gate-house.

Salím Beg. The prayers of all these people are the reward for your pains. In truth, these people are regarded by you in the light of your family. The prosperity of this province of Lankurán is due to the blessing of your justice.

[The petitioners come forward and bow.]

Plaintiff.¹ Khán, your sacrifice ! My brother was sick : they said,[“] “This man is a doctor :” I gave him three tománs : I brought him to the head of my brother’s bed, in the hope that he would make him well. When he came to the head of the sick man’s bed he bled him, and the death of my brother took place while the blood was flowing out.² Now I say, “Cruel man, at least give me back my money !” But he does not give me back my money at all ; he says, “If I had not bled him it would have been even worse than this,” and he even claims something more of me. O give me justice ! may I guard around your head !

Khán [to the Defendant]. Doctor, how, if your excellency had not drawn blood, would it have been worse than this ? What can be worse than this ?

The Defendant.³ May I become your sacrifice, Khán ! The brother of this man was afflicted with the mortal malady of dropsy. If I had not drawn blood he would have died¹ six months later, without doubt or question. With one blood letting I have freed this man from the trouble of six months' further needless expense !

Khán. After all this, doctor, according to your excellency's saying, this man should bestow on you some extra sum as well ?

Doctor. Yes : may I become your sacrifice ! if he acts with justice, most certainly.

Khán [turning to those present]. By Allah, I do not know in what way to give judgment for these people, that the claims may be satisfied. I have never before had experience of claims of this difficulty.

One of the bystanders. May I become the sacrifice for your head ! Respect is incumbent towards the class of physicians,² they attend to the wants of all men. Therefore, command this man to give the doctor a robe as well, and make him content, more especially as I your servant know of this doctor that he is a most skilful physician.

Khán. Well now, since he is an acquaintance of yours, let it be so. Let them do as you have said. [Turning to the Petitioner] O man, go ! and bestow on the physician a cloak, that he may be content with you. Samad Beg, send a farrásh, let him go, get the cloak from this man and give it to the doctor.³

[Samad Beg comes down. At this moment the Vazir, out of breath, enters the Talar from the door : he takes his pen-case³ out of his pocket, and places it on the ground before the Khán.]

Vazír. May I be your sacrifice ! My being any further

Vazír is more than I want!¹ It is enough for me! The reward of my services has come to me, and for the future give the Vazírship to whomsoever you may know to be fit for it. For I must take myself off out of this province, and wander from door to door!

Khán [astonished]. Vazír, what has happened to Your Excellency? But what state of things is this—for what reason —?

Vazír. May I become your sacrifice! To-day, over all the face of the earth the justice, equity, and humanity of Your Highness is the reiteration of tongues! From awe of you, no servant of the court could have stretched forth a hand against the property or the family of any poor man! But see now, your nephew Tímúr Áká,² how much he is unmindful of you! For he comes in daylight to the house of a man such as I am, and makes an attempt against my wife's honour!

Khán [in a rage]. Vazír, what are you saying? Has Tímúr dared do this? What do you mean?

Vazír. May your salt blind me³ if I have misrepresented anything! I myself with my own eyes saw him; I seized him to take him up and bring him into your presence, but he shook me off and has escaped from my hands!

Khán. Samad Beg, go quickly and call Tímúr here, but say nothing about this business. [Samad Beg bows, and goes out.] Vazír, calm yourself! and let me give such a judgment now that the whole world may take warning by it!

Vazír. May I be your sacrifice!⁴ The kings of past times spared neither their own children nor their kin in the execution of justice ; Caliphs of mighty renown demanded terrible retribution of their own sons for a single side glance at the wife of any one of the people ! Sultan Mahmud of Ghaznah, with his own hand struck off the head of one of his courtiers for this crime ; and hence it is that after the lapse of ages the renown of their justice is recorded and remains in the world.

Khán. [to the Vazír]. Vazír, you will presently see that your Khán will in nowise do less than the Caliphs and Sultan Mahmud of Ghaznah ! and more especially in this case ! [At this moment Samad Beg and Tímúr Áká come in —they bow.] [To Tímúr Áká.] Did I not order you never to come into my presence with a sword ?

Tímúr Áká. But I have not got on a sword.

Khán. Ah ! it appeared to me you had got it on ! Well, what business had you in the Vazír's harem ? [Tímúr Áká hangs his head down.] So your aim is that I should get a bad name throughout the province, through a wicked, rascally nephew such as you ! But I have no further need of such a nephew as you ! You men, there ! the cord ! [A number of farráshes lay their hands on a cashmere shawl, and stand ready.] Throw the shawl round the neck of this rascal, this rioter, and pull him down !

[While the farráshes are preparing to throw the shawl, the eyes of all those present in the court fill with tears. The Master of the Ceremonies, and all those who are the Khán's servants, cry out,—]

O, Khán, may we be your sacrifice ! He is but a youth ! Forgive his fault this time !

Khán. By the soul of my father, never will I forgive him [turning to the farráshes]. Throw the shawl !

[The farráshes again come a little closer. All, both great and small, lose their self-control, and begin helplessly to weep. They throw themselves on the ground, entreating and importuning, saying,—] ^{¶^}

Mercy, O, Khán ! Do not give the order ! Pardon him, he is his mother's only son !

[They weep and sob.]

Khán. It cannot be ! it cannot be ! I seek my pardon with Allah ! [Quite beside himself with rage, turning to the farráshes.] O, sons of dogs ! did I not say, "Throw the noose ?"

[The farráshes, shawl in hand, make another move and come nearer. Tímúr Áká suddenly puts his hand behind him, draws a pistol from his waist, and points it at the farráshes. The farráshes, frightened by this, fall back, and Tímúr Áká springing aside from those who would seize or hold him, goes off.]

Khán [after him]. Ho, there ! seize him ! Do not let him go ! [They all rush about, but no one goes off after him.] Khán, [scowling, turns to the nobles.] There is no one of you who is worthy of my regard ! Why did you let this rascal go off ? [No one answers.] Samad Beg ! [Samad Beg comes forward.] Quick ! take fifty mounted men along with you : seek out and find Tímúr in whatsoever part of the world he may be, and then seize him and bring him here handcuffed ! As long as I have not killed him the province will get no rest ; and my mind, too, cannot settle down.

Samad Beg. On my eyes be it.

[He goes out by the door.]

Khán [to the nobles]. Go ! you are dismissed. [They all disperse.] Azíz Áká! [Azíz Áká comes forward.] .

Is the boat ready ?

Azíz Áká. Yes, it is ready.

Khán [getting up]. Vazír, you go and keep calm ; do not brood on your grief ; the retaliation due to you shall not fall to the ground. Here, take this ! give this ring to Nisá Khánum. I sent to-day on purpose to the goldsmith, and they chose and brought this ring for her. Occupy yourself with the preparations for the bridal, for in a week we must set about the business.

Vazír. Yes, certainly ! I will act according to the commands of Your Highness.

[He bows and goes out. After which the Khán and Azíz Áká get on board the boat and go for a sail on the sea.] .

[The curtain falls.]

ACT IV.¹⁶.

[The scene is laid in Sholih Khánúm's room. Sholih Khánúm and Nisá Khánúm are seated, talking to one another, in great perplexity and anxiety.]

Nisá Khánúm. We have not heard about what has happened, nor how matters have gone ! Masúd has not come back ! He has not brought any news ! my mind is so much disturbed !

Sholih Khánúm. Why is your mind disturbed ? According to your own saying, as regards Tímúr Áká, the Khán cannot do anything bad.

Nisá Khánúm. It is true he cannot do him harm ; but I fear that a separation may come between me and Tímúr Áká, and that is worse than death.

[At this moment Áká Masúd enters by the door.]

Sholih Khánúm. Áká Masúd, speak, tell me ! how did it all turn out ?

Áká Masúd. How would you have had it turn out ? The Vazír made his complaint to the Khán. The Khán sent off, they brought Tímúr Áká, and he was going to strangle him.¹⁷ Tímúr Áká drew a pistol, dispersed the farráshes, and escaped from among them. The Khán has commanded fifty men to be dispatched, to find him out wherever he may be. They are to seize him, and bring him handcuffed before the Khán, for him to give him over to be killed.

And now all the town and the houses are overrun with men, in order to find him.¹

[Nisá Khánum, in dreadful anxiety, heaves a sigh. At that moment the door opens and Tímúr Áká enters.]

Sholih Khánum. O, woe, my mother dear ! What state of things is this ? Why have you come here ? How have you come here ? But have you a lion's heart ? for are you not in fear of your life ?

Tímúr Áká [smiling]. What has happened, that I should be in fear of my life ?

Sholih Khánum. What has not happened ? The Khán has sent men to look everywhere and find you. They are to seize you and carry you off, so that he can kill you ! Why then do you come here in this imperturbed way ? Áká Masúd, Allah bless you ! go outside and watch, that no one comes in here.

[Áká Masúd goes out.]

Tímúr Áká. Do you fancy that, for fear of being killed, I should not² come to-day to see Nisá Khánum ? I have already laid my head at her feet !³ Still, I have not come now without a purpose. I want to carry off Nisá Khánum to-night, and take her to some other place, for I cannot leave her⁴ here any more. Your husband, having begun to⁴ act treacherously, towards me, I can no longer leave my betrothed in his house ; for in future I cannot come and go here as formerly.

Sholih Khánum. Very good ; I, too, am content as regards this matter. But your coming here in broad daylight was not good. Do not you know that Zíbá Khánum has put people in a hundred places to spy on us ? On any sort of pretext she would give you up to be killed, and give us a bad name. It would be better for you to get away from here somehow for the present. Be ready at midnight with horse and man before the gate. I will bring out Nisá Khánúm at that hour, and give her over into your hands, for you to take her up and carry her off.

Tímúr Áká. Nisá Khánúm, do you also agree ?

Nisá Khánúm. Of course I agree ! There is no other help for it but this.

[At this moment Áká Masúd calls out in front of the door.]

O, mercy ! the Vazír is coming.

Sholih Khánúm and Nisá Khánúm [the colour leaving their cheeks]. O, mother ! woe ! Mercy ! O, Tímúr Áká, go and hide behind this curtain, and let us see if we cannot send away this tyrant !¹⁹

Tímúr Áká [without in the least changing his attitude—quite calmly]. Never again will I go behind this curtain ! Let him come ! and let him see me here too !

Sholih Khánúm and Nisá Khánúm [falling at his feet and embracing his knees in the utmost agitation]. By Allah's heart ! do not throw yourself into a wave of blood ! By your father's tomb,¹ go and hide behind this curtain.

Tímúr Áká. Never !

[Áká Masúd, putting his head inside the door a second time.]

O, mercy ! the Vazír has arrived !

Sholih Khánúm and Nisá Khánúm. O ! may I protect thy head ? Have pity on us ! If the Vazír sees you here again this time, without a doubt he will have us killed.

Tímúr Áká. Ha ! then for the sake of your lives.

[He goes behind the curtain ; a second afterwards the Vazír enters the room.]

Vazír. It is well that you two are both here, for I must have some conversation with you,¹ so give me your attention. Sholih, you know when we marry your sister to the Khán, how much both my rank and your position will increase thereby. On this account, is it not necessary for you to take care of your good name,^{rep} and not give your reputation to the wind? Let them not say that the Khán's sister-in-law has comings and goings with unwarrantable people.

Sholih Khánum [slowly and composedly]. Be pleased to say—let me see with what unwarrantable people have I comings and goings?

Vazír. For instance, with Tímúr Áká, whom I saw in your room.²

Sholih Khánum. Yes, with your wife, Zíbú Khánum, behind that curtain.

Vazír. That is true! I have no bad suspicions about you. It is very possible that this wickedness may rest on Zíbá Khánum's head. I say these words to you only in order that³ you regulate your conduct in such a way that no bad words may be spoken before the Khán regarding you, and his heart become cold towards Nisá Khánum on that account. For at present he is quite beside himself about Nisá Khánum; he has ordered me to see to the preparations for it all, so that next week he may have the wedding. This is a ring, too, which he has sent as a present. Nisá Khánum, come! take it! put it on your finger.

[He places the ring in the palm of Nisá Khánum's hand.]

Nisá Khánum. A girl about whose sister they can have any evil suspicions cannot be worthy of the Khán!⁴ Take this ring, and when you have found a girl worthy of the Khán, put it on her finger.

[She puts the ring on the ground before the Vazír, and goes out.] ¹⁵⁰

Vazír [after her]. My girl, but what evil suspicions have I got regarding your sister ? I only said these words to her as a piece of advice.

Sholih Khánum. Could you not give this piece of advice to your wife Zíbá Khánum ?

Vazír. Of course ! to-morrow I shall talk even more severely than this to her.

Sholih Khánum. Then why to-morrow ? but cannot you go to-day ?

Vazír. Now it is no longer so necessary, for even supposing Tímúr Áká was her lover ; he has got his punishment ; if he is found he will go to his death,¹ or if he escapes he will have to wander from door to door, far away from this province ; and so in future no further talk is necessary on this matter. We must set to work now with the preparations for Nisá Khánum's wedding.

Sholih Khánum. Then go to my mother's room and talk over these matters with her. This is none of my business !

Vazír. You go and call to your mother to come here, and we will talk it over here in this room. [At this moment the door opens, Pari Khánum and Nisá Khánum enter, the Vazír turns to Pari Khánum.] ¹⁵¹ It is well that Your Excellency has yourself come here : be pleased to sit down.

Pari Khánum. May your evil fortunes be my portion !² This is no time for sitting down ; if you go off again, I shall not be able to see you. Let your ear be mine ! I have a word to say to you. Praise be to Allah ! you are so much occupied, that it impossible to see you.

Vazír. Yes, more particularly these days, when I have had no opportunity of seeing you. Speak—let me see ! what is your business ?

Pari Khánúm. May your evil fortunes be my portion ! It is not such a great affair. I had gone to get a charm from Kurbán the soothsayer, in order that, if Allah please, He would vouchsafe you a son by my daughter, Sholih Khánúm.¹ When the soothsayer had written the charm, he said, “ You must set aside a porridge of wheat equal to three times the amount of the Vazír’s head, and you must bestow it on the poor and indigent.”² And now I must get three times the amount of your head, that the auspicious moment for the porridge may not go by.

Vazír. You have got a strange thing to do, my dear ! As long as my head is on my body, how can you take my head and get the amount of it ?

Pari Khánúm. May your evil fortune be my portion ! I can do it. It is very easy ! the soothsayer himself taught me about it. A deep jar must be placed over your head : into whatever sized jar your head fits,^{“v} the measure of that jar is the amount of your head. Nísá Khánúm, bring a pot here.

[*Nisá Khánúm goes and fetches a small pot, which Áká Masúd had got ready. Pari Khánúm puts out her hand and quickly and gently takes the Vazír’s hat off his head.]*³

Vazír. Although what you have got to do seems most unusual, still I cannot make any opposition, for whatsoever the soothsayers have said must be carried out. Would that Allah vouchsafed to grant Sholih Khánúm’s desire !

Pari Khánúm. Yes, may I be the sacrifice of your head ! Nísá Khánúm, put the pot over his head.

[Nisá Khánúm puts the pot on his head: the pot comes down to just over the Vazír's eyebrows, but will not go lower. Nisá Khánúm strikes it violently, to make it come down lower.]

Vazír [putting up both his hands]. Uf! O, mercy! What are you doing? My nose is being hurt,—gently!

[He takes the pot off his head.]

Pari Khánúm [quickly]. Daughter, bring a bigger pot.

[Nisá Khánúm runs, and quickly brings a large pot.]

Vazír. O, my dear mother, for Allah's sake, cannot this business remain for another time? At present, I wanted to talk to you: I have an important matter.

Pari Khánúm. No, no, my son! It is impossible, the auspicious moment for it will pass.[¶] May I be the sacrifice of your head! Do not be vexed; it is only a minute's work, and then we will attend to you. [Crying.] For is it right that I should die now, without having, at the end of my life, seen a child in Sholih Khánúm's arms! [With her eyes wet with tears, she turns to Nisá Khánúm.] Daughter, put the pot on his head. You ought to have brought this one from the first.

[*Nisá Khánúm puts the pot over his head, and, as the pot comes down below the Vazír's neck, Pari Khánúm rapidly makes a sign to Sholih Khánúm in the direction of the curtain. Sholih Khánúm, gently lifting up the curtain, brings out Timúr Áká, and leads him to the door, and he goes away through door on the further side.*¹ Then Nisá Khánúm takes the pot off.]

Vazír. But now, at last, mother, sit down; for I, too, want to talk to you.

Pari Khánúm. On my eyes be it, my son.

[She is just going to sit down, when, from within the court-yard, there arises a noise of shouting and talking, and before a minute has gone by, Tímúr Áká enters the room, pistol in hand. The Vazír, at the sight of Timúr Áká, begins trembling.]

Tímúr Áká. May my father's kindness to you become your curse!¹ And so, at last, wrongfully and unlawfully, you would give me up to be killed. But I am not going to be killed, till I have first killed you.

[He points the pistol at the Vazír.] [“]

Sholih Khánúm [falling at his feet, imploring him].
Mercy, O Tímur, put down your hand! contain yourself!

[Timúr Áká lowers his hand. At this moment Samad Beg and a number of guards enter the room and halt at the door.]

Tímúr Áká. Samad Beg, what is your purpose? what are you going to do?

Samad Beg. Sir, we are the servants both of your father and of you, and there is nothing that should cause us to act disrespectfully towards you.² But you yourself know that it is the Khán's order, and we must take you before him.

Tímúr Áká. You cannot take me before him alive. But take him my head! Only my head does not fall into somebody else's hands in this easy way. If you have the power to take it, why, come on, in Allah's name!³

Samad Beg. Sir, even granted that you had fired that pistol, and killed one of us; the fifty guards who are with me, they cannot all be killed. But nothing of this kind is necessary. The Khán, no longer in a rage,⁴ has given his word, promising not to do anything to you.

Tímúr Áká. I never had any reliance in his word and his deed.^o When has he stood to his word, that any one should believe him ? I stick to what I said before.¹

[At this moment, for the second time, a talking and shouting is raised in the court. Salím Beg, the Master of the Ceremonies, and Rezá, Timúr Aká's foster-brother, enter the room.]

Salím Beg. Samad Beg, go behind ! Tímir Aká, may your head be blessed ! The Khán, your uncle, had gone for a sail on the sea, when suddenly a contrary wind began to blow, and the boat, overturning, foundered. So now, already, the people are assembled round the palace of the justice-hall, awaiting for Your Excellency's arrival, that you should take possession of the carpet of state, and hold the position of your father.

Tímir Aká. Rezá, is this so ?²

Rezá. Yes, as I am your sacrifice, it is so ! If it is your pleasure, let us go.

[At this moment the Vazír and Samad Beg come forward and throw themselves in the dust.]

Sir, may we be your sacrifice ! forgive us !

Tímir Aká. Samad Beg, you get up and stand on one side. [Samad Beg gets up and goes to the side.] Vazír, the reason for my coming to your house was this, that I loved, and still do love,³ your sister-in-law, Nisá Khánum. In accordance with the commands of Allah, the law of the Prophet,^{o1} and with her own consent, I wished to carry her off ; but you, by reason of certain further and ultimate aims, wished to give her to him who, unhallowed,⁴ is now dead, and so on this account I could not explain the root of the matter to you. Hence it was that you, having evil suspicions of me, fell into the design of killing me. "But Heaven's decree makes vain the plans of men."¹ Allah, in accordance with the requirements of His justice—which righteously sets before every man, rich and poor, the reward of his works—has set free the right doer, and brought about the contrary of your intentions. Still I, bearing in mind the evil practices which have been committed in the light of day in the affairs of the peasants and officials by you during the time of your power, must not entrust to you a second time the charge of the Vazírship,² nor allow you to remain in your former employment. For well I know that deeds which can but arise out of the evil propensity of a person,³ it is impossible should ever be so eradicated from his nature that he should be able to attend to the affairs of the people in the regular way. But since you have been nourished by the salt of this house, I close my eyes entirely to your past offences. Henceforth, for the remainder of your life you shall be my pensioner, and shall remain in complete tranquillity and ease, at the head of your own house and family.^{or} But, having due regard for good order in the affairs of the state and of the people, you will have no further hopes from me of being encharged with the Vazírship ; for the interference of men like you in the affairs of the kingdom is contrary to justice and humanity. For whosoever wishes to bring the affairs of the kingdom into good order in a regulated way, and improve the peasants and the people, must of necessity set aside uninformed, incompetent, and interested individuals, and commit the affairs of the state and the nation to experienced, competent, and upright men !⁴ Let him not give the ministration over the business of Allah's servants to a person who is naturally addicted to covetousness and taking bribes, or who gives judgment contrary to right and desert, with a view to the acquisition of what will be to his own profit. And then the affairs of the state and the nation being set towards improvement in a right way, all the peasants and the officials and private persons can rest and be free from disquietude. But, at any rate, for the present there is no time for talking any more on this subject. We must set to work and complete the preparations for the wedding. Let this be your business:—occupy yourself with the arrangements which are necessary for Nisá Khánúm. Please Allah, in the coming week the instructions for the marriage ceremony will be given, and affairs will be quickly brought to a termination. Pari Khánúm, my mother! Sholih Khánúm, my sister! adieu! Occupy yourselves in your own business and your affairs. or Pari Khánúm and Sholih Khánúm. May Allah prolong your life and your good fortune, Áká! and may you have the Khánate and the dominion for a hundred years more!

[Tímúr Aká, accompanied by the persons of position, leaves the room: the Vazír remains in the apartment in a state of complete stupefaction.]

*The Guards [with loud shouts in the court without]. May prosperity attend on Tímúr Khán!*¹

[The curtain falls.]

NOTES TO ACT I.

p. 43, n. 1. The subordinate sentence ending with the past part. is inserted between the subject and the verb. Lit. “ After having been set forth in four acts—reaches its end.” See Introd. p. xxxvii.

n. 2. ‘Farrásh,’ lit. ‘carpet spreader.’ The duties performed by the English ‘housemaid’ fall to the farráshes in a Persian household. But, besides keeping the house clean, they are in a noble’s establishment the constables and executioners of his court. At his command they administer the noose or the stick, make arrests, and take steps for the recovery of fines, etc.; in short, they carry out the pains and penalties of the law.
 The word ‘farrásh’ is retained in the translation, as there is no name in English for a servant who is at the same time ‘housemaid’ and ‘executioner.’

n. 3. Dar kháni-yi-Vazír and would be more correct. See Introd. p. xxxii.

p. 44, n. 1. The Dramatis Personæ have been grouped according to their respective households. We have Mírzá Habíb, the Vazír or chief minister of the Governor of Lankurán, the Vazír’s farrásh (see note 2), groom, steward or head servant, and the general servants. All these are of the outer, or men’s apartments: Belonging to the Harem are Zíbá, the old wife (the companion of the Vazír's youth), and Sholih, the young wife (a late addition), who, being the reigning favourite, is on the worst of terms with old Zíbá. As guests of Sholih the favourite, are her mother and sister, Parí and Nisá Khánum. The guardian of these ladies is black Áká Masúd, the chamberlain, a most consequential personage, who closes the list of the Vazír's establishment.

We pass on now to the Khán, governor of Lankurán by virtue of his birth and possessions. His power is unlimited, and his decisions—for he is judge as well as autocrat—are final. The territorial Kháns of fifty years ago were much more powerful than are the provincial governors of the present day, whose position is entirely dependent on the will of the Shah. Of old they were local chiefs, powerful from the number of their tribesmen, their slaves and their wealth. Little they cared for the ministers of the Shah, who let them alone so long as they paid in the revenue, allowing them to govern their provinces much as they pleased. But, to return : of the Khan's household we have his chief body-servant, who stands at his elbow and possesses his ear; the master of the ceremonies, (who regulates the court of justice,) and his deputy, who is also the lieutenant of the gate-house. The gate-house is the spot at which all descend who enter the palace: before it the petitioners assemble, and the servants lounge about, awaiting their lord's pleasure. The lieutenant of the gate-house has therefore no unimportant post in the Khán's establishment, for all who enter must propitiate his favour. His coadjutor is the chief of the farráshes—in a house of this kind the head executioner, who directs his underlings in the carrying out of the Khán's decrees. The court is filled by the nobles and officials of the province of Lankurán. Tímúr Áká is the Khán's nephew, the accepted lover of Nisá, whom her host, the Vazír, wishes to marry to the Khán, Tímúr's uncle. Rizá is Tímúr's confidant. Lastly come Hájí Sálih, a merchant; and a doctor, a man of long words and deadly practice.

A few words may be added in explanation of the titles. In Persia every man who can read and write prefixes the title Mírzá to his name. But Mírzá after the name is Prince, thus; Farhad Mírzá, Prince Farhad. In the provinces especially 'khán' meant originally what 'chief' did in Scotland amongst the clans, and it is in this sense that the word is used in the Play. Now-a-days Kháns are as common in Tehrán as Esquires are in London; and this title, or Áká (or Ághá), is in courtesy applied to all men above the position of a servant. Servants are generally called Beg (pronounced short, to rhyme with 'Peg'). All ladies are Khánum, which is the feminine form of Khán.

Khán, Khánum, Áká, and Beg, are all put after the name. Áká (or Ághá) is sometimes prefixed, as in servants' names, and, so placed, would seem to be less honourable than Áká affixed. Thus Áká Bashír is Bashír the steward, but Tímúr Áká is Tímúr the gentleman. But this is no invariable rule.

p. 45, n. 1. Rasht is the chief Persian port on the Caspian. It is on the southern shore of that sea, the chief town of the province of Gilán, and the emporium of the silk trade. The district is celebrated for its embroidery.

p. 45, n. 2. The present is used for the future tense. See Introduction, p. xxxvi.

n. 3. The word Vak̄ti is to be understood before bar-gashtan, '(at the time of your) returning here.'

The infinitive is employed substantively. See Introduction, p. xxxi.

In the merchant's reply, as in numerous other places, the absence of all conjunctions—or, and, then—is to be noted. It is characteristic of idiomatic Persian.

p. 46, n. 1. Kári na-dáram, "I have no particular business." See Introd. p. xxxiii.

n. 2. Anjá kih bidúzand—The word 'vak̄ti-kih' may be understood before this: "When they may be making it there." The subjunctive follows kih. See Intr. p. xxxiii.

n. 3. Agar—if understood: hence the subjunctive.

n. 4. Lit. 'has not come (right).' Perfect where we use the present. See Introd. p. xxxvi.

n. 5. Kih, 'that,' understood, and hence the verb is in the subjunctive.

Obs.—In the beginning of the sentence the plural 'you' is employed; in the latter part the more familiar 'thou' comes in: this change from 2nd pers. sing. to 2nd pers. pl. is of frequent occurrence in the spoken language.

n. 6. The perfect for the present. See Introd. p. xxxvi.

The present subjunctive following is on account of the Tá at the beginning of the sentence.

n. 7. No-rúz is the great national festival of the Persian year. It dates back to pre-Islamic times, and is independent of the Lunar Calendar instituted by the Prophet; for New-Year's Day celebrates the return of Spring, and occurs when the sun enters Aries towards the end of March. On this occasion visits and the interchange of presents are customary.

p. 47, n. 1. Bi-gíram (-agar understood), "If I get it;" so also before na-gíram. There is, in the text, a play on the name Zibá (meaning adorned), and zibandagi (adornment), a little sarcasm of the Vazír's at the expense of his old wife.

n. 2. Obs., Dúkhtah-ashrá bakhshídí, means "when you have presented the sewed (or made up garment) of it (i.e. this cloth)," and not "when you have given this sewed thing to her," for in that case the phrase would run Dúkhtah bakhshídí-sh (for bakhshídí-ash).

n. 3. The verb is 'gír uftádan,' and 'ajab' is here really an adverb. 'Wonderful what a pass have not we got into!'

n. 4. Literally, "(even if by mistake) you should have told (goftahi) these (my) words to somebody here (you must say) you have not said them (nagoftahi), eh?"

n. 5. The merchant is supposed to be complacently stroking his beard, that its length may vouch for his orthodox respectability and secretiveness.

n. 6. The whole of this clause affords a good example of the construction of subordinate sentences, each terminating with a past participle. See Introd. p. xxxvii. An dárð means the door other than that by which the merchant has gone out. Do dasti and sakht are here both used adverbially. See Introd. p. xxxii. The doors are double and folding in Persian houses, hence the use of the former adverb.

p. 48, n. 1. The *Isfahání*s are noted for stinginess, and this method of giving a cheap relish to their bread without unnecessary waste of cheese has passed into a proverb.

Obs.—The pronoun in nán ashrá is ambiguous, it may mean either ‘her bread’ or ‘the bread for it,’ i.e. the cheese. Also note ‘Shudah ast,’ the idiomatic use of the perfect where we translate by the present tense, ‘comes to pass.’ See Introd. p. xxxvi.

- p. 48, n. 2. Bávar mi-kardam, lit. “that I was believing,” the imperfect indicative for the subjunctive. See Introd. p. xxxviii.
- n. 3. Magar, perhaps? are you not? an idiomatic use of this particle. Observe too the clipped pronunciation of chí for chíz.
- n. 4. Bar-ma-gardán, the negative particle put between the preposition and the verb. See Introd. p. xxxv.
- n. 5. An yaki dar, a vulgarism, as with us ‘that there door.’ Observe the sequence of the tenses in the dramatic narrative, perf. pres. plup., “I listened, I saw it is even so as I had imagined.”
- n. 6. The verb (báshad) is omitted. “(How bright they) will be!”
- n. 7. Obs.—There is hardly a conjunction in the whole of these long speeches. Note a curious instance of how the original meaning of a word becomes perverted. Kabáhat means ‘baseness.’ Now it is commonly said to a naughty child ‘Kabáhat bifahm,’ lit. ‘Understand baseness,’ meaning “know (and hence avoid) what is disgraceful.” So in the present case, the Vazír would say to his wife “(To understand) what is base is a very proper thing in the world.” The phrase is not used ironically, as might at first sight appear, and kabáhat now comes to mean ‘propriety, high mindedness’, etc.; the very opposite of its original signification.

p. 49, n. 1. On the use of the imperfect indicative for the subjunctive, see Introd. p. xxxviii.

n. 2. The partridge takes the place of the ostrich with us, as exemplifying imbecile ruse. Observe, from the word migúyand, to the end of her speech she is relating what the people say of him, hence the last phrase is not to be taken interrogatively.

n. 3. “What words are (lit. is) these you utter!”—the plural being followed by a singular verb.

n. 4. The feast at the end of the Month of Fasting (Ramazán) is the great day of the Lunar or Religious-year. It is called by the Turks the Lesser Bairam. Everybody pays visits and congratulates his friends on the termination of the wearisome thirty days of fasting, during which none may eat, drink, or smoke, from dawn to dark, no trifling matter when Ramazán falls in summer time. It is the great time for shows, and the streets are crowded with gaily-dressed throngs of sight-seers.

n. 5. ‘Zadah,’ ‘shudah’ are here for ‘zadah-ast,’ ‘shudah-ast.’

n. 6. The slight pause comes after the ‘nah,’ ‘yak dil nah, hizar dil,’ ‘not with one heart, (but with) a thousand hearts.’

p. 50, n. 1. Pronounce ‘sizát ast.’

n. 2. ‘(Having gone)going out muttering,’ kunán, pres. part. is used for the continuous action. See Introd. p. xxxvii.

n. 3. Kih followed by perf. subj. See Introd. p. xxxiv.

n. 4. Andákht, kard for (báyist), andákhtan, kardan. See Introduction, p. xxxviii., and not to be mistaken for the perfect tense.

p.50,n.5. The pronoun ash refers to 'him,' not to 'her, tongue.

p. 51, n. 1. Míraftah (búd), " he had been going, when he puts " mí, shows the continuous action.

n. 2. Pídar súkhtah (son of, understood), a burnt father, and pidar sag, "dog-fathered one," are the most common terms of abuse ; the former asserts that the abused individual's father is a brand in hell, and the later term stigmatises his parentage as 'unclean,' and hence incapable of enjoying Paradise.

n. 3. Fuhsh-ashra, his abuse (i.e. your abuse), not 'the abuse about it.'

n. 4. This prudish display of modesty is by reason of the man's entrance, a servant of the outer or male quarter of the house. Ugly old women are always extremely careful to hide their faces in the East. Servants awaiting orders stand with their head's bent and arms crossed, as described in the text.

n. 5. Dastash for bidastash, in his hand ; — the prep. omitted. See Introd. p. xxxii.

p. 52, n. 1. See Intr. p. xxxvi., and p. xxxix., pres. following past tense. The groom quotes his actual words of enquiry to Haydar.

n. 2. The bastinado on the feet is the ordinary form of punishment in Persia. The instruments for the castigation are the pole (falak), against which the feet are held, and the willow wands, nicely peeled and made very flexible by being kept in a tank till required. The pole, about four yards long, and of the thickness of a man's leg, has at the middle two nooses of rope, by which the culprit's feet are firmly held against the wood. The man to be bastinadoed is thrown on his back, while his ankles are held by the nooses, in such a way that the soles lie uppermost, the instep resting on the pole, which latter is held by two farráshes about a yard from the ground. When the order is given, other farráshes strike the soles of the culprit's feet, continuing to use the rods till they get broken off quite short. To eat 100 sticks (as the Persian idiom has it), means to have that number splintered up on one's feet. These willow wands are originally about four or five feet long, and of the thickness of a finger. A severe bastinadoing will often lame a man for months. The unfortunate groom is in terror of a castigation of this sort for his carelessness.

p. 52, n. 3. "By the Khán's head," i.e. by the most sacred thing in Lankurán, I conjure you!

p. 53, n. 1. Kurbánat shavam, "May I become your sacrifice!" an every-day phrase, meaning, May I be the sacrifice for you, with my life or my soul in this world, or the next, understood. "I have eaten filth," i.e. I debase myself in your sight. It is curious to note that though the man is half beside himself with fear at the prospective bastinado, yet he cannot refrain from a covert insult. For the mere mention of the Vazír's paternal tomb (the most sacred of places in a Moslem's eyes), after making use of the word 'filth,' is an indignity. The effect produced on the Vazír by these appeals is absolutely nil, and none of the spectators are surprised at it. The fantastic justice subsequently dealt out by the Vazír to his steward, passing over the groom's misdemeanour, is entirely in accordance with Persian ideas and ways. It is simply due to a grim freak on the Vazír's part. "I have committed a fault, I and my father and my mother"

(i.e. those whom I most respect and myself are all as miserable sinners before you !) All such phrases, by constant iteration, lose much of their solemnity to the ears of a Persian.

p. 53, n. 2. "O master ! O life!" i.e. O my life, beloved master ! "may I go around your head !" Equivalent to "May I become your sacrifice!" The Persians have a superstition that when any one walks round the head of another, he thereby takes on himself that person's evil luck, and so, vicariously, will bear the punishment that may be in store for him who is so circumambulated. The feeling is so prevalent, that mothers do their best to prevent their children walking round any body. Should a child have inadvertently done so it is promptly made to go round again in the reverse direction, thereby undoing the spell in their estimation.

n. 3. Taksíramrá to be pronounced, not Taksír-i-mará. Literally, "After that, if you wish, kill (me, for) you are free to do what you will." Agar, 'if,' is understood. See Introd. p. xxxix.

n. 4. All the out-door servants are called "servants at the gate-house," in opposition to the in-door servants, whose work lies inside the great gate in the courts.

p. 54, n. 1. Khudá yá shukr, "O God ! Thanks ! (that I have escaped the beating)." No Moslem ever thanks a man: where we say 'I thank you,' they say "I thank Allah, that you are so kind to me," for you, his fellow man, have no free will in the matter. Hence it is that the grateful Persian never even hints that his good fortune arises from any direct benevolence on your part; but, if he wish to be particularly effusive, affirms that his own happiness is entirely dependent on the state of your feelings. “If you are well, then I must be well,” and ends up by invoking Allah’s blessing on your head, not so much because you have done good to him, but because it is in the sight of Allah.

NOTES TO ACT II.

p. 55, n. 1. Chih khiyáli ast, etc., “Into what way of thought has the Vazír fallen? Observe the use of magar.

n. 2. Báyast just, Báyast kih bijúyím. See Introd.
p. xxxviii. Bijahat, etc. “for no reason, you did not allow (that) up to now,” i.e. you have need lessly hindered me till now from, etc.

p. 56, n. 1. (in two places). Písh-i khud, “Having brought him before you, (i.e. into your service,) you have made him (ash) (your) secretary.”

n. 2. Kih, ‘that,’ understood before begúyad in the subjunctive : see Introd. p. xxxviii.

p. 57, n. 1. Read Mírzá-yi-mará, rather than Mírzá-yamrá, as being more emphatic. The salt (hospitality) eaten is supposed to cause blindness to the ungrateful guest. Kih, for ‘that,’ is understood after Kúr-ash kunad.

n. 2. Literally, “all his arrangements being overturned.” The úrá is governed by the past. part. of the verb Ham-zadan.

n. 3. It is not very clear to what the ‘bisari man bifiristi’ refers, for how does Sholih’s abuse of the maid set the maid against her mistress Zíbá? But the words in the text would not seem to be capable of any other interpretation.

A model wife, according to Persian notions, hardly ever leaves her own rooms : a 'gad-about' is a term of disgrace.

- p. 57, n. 4. Literally, "has thrown me into such (evil) days," i.e. by marrying this impudent young wife.
- n. 5. When Persian women are frightened, their legs, never very strong, have a way of collapsing at the first alarm, and they drop down powerless, in a sitting posture, on the ground.
- n. 6. To put dust or ashes on the head is, as is well known, the sign of mourning throughout the East. The meaning here is, "What woe have I not brought on myself by my inadvertence!"
- n. 7. Pardah, the curtain, hanging before the recess or alcove, found to every Persian room.
- n. 8. Observe ínjá munásib nabúd "There was no fit time or place (for talking) here," i.e. in the place I am speaking of, or as we should say 'there.'
- p. 58, n. 1. According to Moslem custom, a husband must visit the habitations of his wives in due rotation, and not favour one more than another. Each of his four legal wives, if he have so many, has a suite of rooms to herself. These sets of rooms are each, if possible, round a separate court, for the body servants of the various Khánums warmly espouse their mistresses' jealous quarrels, and are apt to keep the place in an uproar if they meet too often.
- n. 2. Note.—Sholih does not in this instance quote her words to her sister, but puts the sentence in the subjunctive, contrary to the general rule of quoting dramatically.

p. 58, n. 3. "If the Vazír (paydá shúd) be seen." Perfect where we use the present.

Magar, 'but?'—asking a question.

n. 4. "Then bring up the donkey and load on the beans!" a proverbial expression, equivalent to our "all the fat in the fire, and the devil to pay." But of its origin the Persians do not give any very clear explanation. The Bákili is a kind of bean that is said to produce madness; and they explain the proverb by saying that the word bákili is used as a synonym for 'idiotcy' (the cause for effect), and hence it would read, "Then load up your asses with bosh, and go fooling away as you like!" Cf. the Pythagorean prohibition against beans.

p. 59, n. 1. Literally, "You have no foot to go with, nor place to remain in, any more" (dígar).

n. 2. Literally, "I will make a dog's table-cloth of his belly," i.e. rip him up, make him food for the dogs. Sufrih, 'table-cloth,' is equivalent to table with us, meaning all the victuals which the table carries, hence food.

n. 3. Namely, the one curtained recess in the room, behind which Zíbá is already concealed.

The explanation given of the expression, 'Dast páchih,' lit. hand, leg (or trowser), is that it is the condition of a man so perturbed as not to know his hand from his foot. This is a little far-fetched. Another explanation has been suggested, more plausible, perhaps, but hardly fit for mention here.

n. 4. The usual polite way of thanking (see the last Note of Act I.) The exact interpretation is, "My good health is dependent on the dolat, prosperity or well being of your head" (i.e. of you). You being well, I also am well.

Dolat may here be translated 'fortune, prosperity,' but its use in this sense is confined in Modern Persian to such phrases as the above.

p. 60, n. 1. In many parts of Persia they have a way of emphasizing a word by a species of reduplication : Bachih machih, "a mere boy;" Lúti-púti, "a regular rascal." This way of talking is most common in Kázirún and Ispahán, but in one form or another is to be observed all over Persia.

n. 2. Observe, this use of the imperf. ind., to be translated by our subjunctive mood. See Introd. p. xxxix.

n. 3. Bachih yi mardum, "This son of another man." By this she would emphasize the fact that the boy was after all not the Vazír's own son or servant (whom he might have treated as he pleased), and that hence he had incurred responsibility in the sight of God and man by damaging him. She says this quite gravely, not sarcastically.

'Days' are said to become 'black' by reason of sorrow, 'times' to become 'bitter' through vexation.

p. 61, n. 1. Note that the doors and windows are one in a Persian room. Both have a sill about half a foot high, over which it is necessary to step or jump.

p. 62, n. 1. Meaning that, in point of fact, instead of Sholih, it is she who has been making love to Timúr.

Observe 'ast,' sing., after the plur. 'harzígíhá.'

"Please Allah, I will arrive in your service!" 'Khidmati' shumá mirasam' is a phrase in everybody's mouth:—“I have come to offer you my services.” “I have come to help you, to attend to you :” here, of course, it is said ironically, meaning “I will pay you out.”

p. 62, n. 2. An unlawful man, that is to say, not a near relative, who might be allowed to visit the Harem under certain circumstances.

p. 63, n. 1. Vel goftan, veyr zadun, durúgh goftanrá. The acc. sign rá applies to all three.

n. 2. The negative of ‘nafiristádah-i’ is understood also before the previous verb, ‘zadah’—“Did you not throw him?”

n. 3. Raftah-am, “knew (that) I had gone;”—perfect used in the place of the pluperfect; so also a line below, ‘uftá-dah (ast), “had happened to be, or was, empty.”

p. 64, n. 1. Bírúni, já-yí, are two unconnected words, ‘outside, to some place.’ Observe the use of the pres. subj.

n. 2. Lit., “You put your name on my head,” i.e. “You attribute to me the qualities you yourself possess.”

n. 3. Lit., “If you like, why kill yourself ; if you like, leave it alone !” i.e. “Kill yourself, or don't, as you please.”

n. 4. Evil speakers, liars and slanderers, are struck on the mouth, that being the offending organ.

p. 65, n. 1. Bi-margi khudat, “By your death, I swear that,” etc., i.e. “May you die (the greatest of all possible misfortunes to me), if I do not speak true,”—a common form of adjuration.

n. 2. If we read “Hey! nímsúz khar!” it would mean, “O seller of half-burnt (sticks), or badly burnt charcoal,”—used as a term of contempt, for the trade is not a very honourable one. Or it may be read, “Hey nímsúz-i khar!" "O asinine half-burnt one," for Masud was a negro, and the word 'half-burnt' would have a contemptuous reference to his complexion; ním súz in that case being a substantive (not an adjective), followed by the qualifying substantive khar. An example of this construction is the common title of 'Khán-i-Hákím', given to a chief; that is, 'Khán, who is also governor, (compare our Governor-General). The obscurity arises from the term not being one in common use. Grammatically, 'seller of half-burnt' is preferable to the reading 'asinine half-burnt one,' but to the context the latter, though not a very ordinary construction, would seem more applicable.

- p. 65, n. 3. He is so much agitated, that he calls his horse scarlet, and tells them to saddle his chesnut cloak. This slip of the tongue is the more easy in the mouth of a Persian, for they do talk of a 'scarlet horse,' meaning one with its tail dyed magenta red.
- n. 4. Chashm, or Bi-chashm, "On (my) eye," is an ordinary answer every servant makes. "May my eyes suffer if I do not obey!" is perhaps the meaning.
- p. 66, n. 1. Lit., "I do not know when she, having come, went there, in order that she might buy (i.e. save) my life!"
- n. 2. Dari kháneh, meaning the court or gate-house of the Khán, where justice is to be administered on Tímúr.

NOTES TO ACT III.

p. 67, n. 1. The Tálár is a sort of alcove or chamber open to the courtyard, in which the Khán sits to give audience to the people. His personal suite, the nobles and officials, stand round him. There, seated on a throne, he listens to the litigants, who crowd in the court some few feet below him. Anybody who pleases can come and stand in his sight and hear him dispense justice. The Tálár roof is much higher than that of the adjoining rooms, and the level, too, on which it is built is above that of the rest of the palace. There is an illustration depicting a Tálár at Tehrán in Fergusson's Nineveh and Persepolis, p. 130. As we have no name in English describing such an apartment, the Persian word has been retained in the translation.

n. 2. That is, at the side door of the Tálár, on the higher level, leading into the courtyard, and, so to speak, within the presence. On the other hand, the petitioners are in the courtyard below, and the rest of the farráshes are collected at the Great Gate, but all within ear-shot of the Tálár.

p. 68, n. 1. The construction is equivalent to Bar dáshtan və andákhtuni sang chih tor? The way in which the poor fellow is caught by the verbal quibble (on the word kasd, or and) is characteristic of their incoherent ways in talking and thinking. The Khán is not purposely unjust, only the man is too confused to state that his intention was to frighten and not to wound the horse.

p. 68, n. 2. An Arabic quotation from the Koran (Ch. V., v. 49).

This of course settles the question beyond all appeal, and displays the Khán's learning.

n. 3. "Comes down (from the Tálár)," lit. "gives them to a farrásh," i.e. gives them over into the charge of a farrásh.

p. 69, n. 1. The Plaintiff speaks in the Lankuráni dialect, in which the á and a become ú and u : note also the elision of certain letters (such as d in burádar, etc.), and the use of peculiar provincial words, such as piyá, 'a man,' ah for ast, 'is.'

n. 2. Lit. "With the flowing out of the blood, at that same time even was the death of my brother." This use of hamún is not uncommon.

n. 3. Note that in contrast to the peasant, the Doctor talks in pedantic language, using as many long Arabic words as possible.

p. 70, n. 1. Pronounce mí-murd, "he had died, or would have died." (Imp. indic.)

n. 2. This method of executing justice is barely an exaggeration of what is to be seen any day in Persia ; the Khán may of course now rely on the future good offices of the Doctor. A farrásh is always sent to carry out the sentence, and that functionary in a case of this kind will take something as a present from both plaintiff and defendant ; a fact well known to his master, who does not feel obliged to pay him any further wages.

What the man gets by this means is amply sufficient.

n. 3. The Kalamdán is here the badge of the Vazírate, which he lays before the Khán, on the ground. We should say his ‘Portfolio.’

p. 71, n. 1. Here bas ast and kifāyat kard both mean “more than enough, too much.”

n. 2. Lit. “I must take up my head (i.e. get up) and go (shudan) away from this country, (wandering) from door from door.”

n. 3. “May your salt blind me!” meaning, May your hospitality or favours turn to my detriment!

n. 4. Observe in the text the pompous language characteristic of the official, with the plurals in ān, the use of Arabic words and phrases, etc.

p. 72, n. 1. In Persia the ordinary method of execution is by strangling. The process is simple. The rope or long shawl (such as is worn round the waist) is hitched round the culprit’s neck, the farráshes seize the rope by either end, and pull against each other till the wretched man is throttled.

NOTES TO ACT IV.

p. 76, n. 1. The nom. is Adam uftádah, “Men, spread here and there, are now searching all the houses,” etc.

n. 2. See Introd. p. xxxix.

n. 3. Lit., “I have laid this head (of mine) in her path.”

n. 4. Lit., “Having made a beginning of dishonouring the salt.” See Introd. p. xxxv. Before “amad o shud kunam,” “nami-tavánam” is understood from the line above.

p. 77, n. 1. "By your father's tomb, (I charge or implore) you." Turá is governed by the verb understood.

p. 78, n 1. Lit., "It has become incumbent on me."

n. 2. Kih, dídamash, "whom I saw." Note this is the full form of the relative pronoun.

n. 3. Lit., "In the heart (idea) that you should make your risings up and sittings down in such a manner that."

n. 4. The construction of all this is purposely stilted. The compound adjective Lá-yik-i-Khán is put before the noun for the sake of emphasis; it is in apposition, and not connected to the noun with the Izáfat.

p. 79, n. 1. Lit., "either having been found, he will go to (his) killing, or having fled." Observe, Búdah báshad of the line above : the perf. subjunctive is used after farzan, introducing a conditional sentence. See Introd.

n. 2. Lit., "May your pains be on my life!" an expression equivalent to "May I be your sacrifice!"

p. 80, n. 1. Fortune-tellers, who also write charms, cast horoscopes, etc., are still most important personages in Persia, indispensable to the women, and not discredited by the men.

n. 2. Fakír o fuķará, lit. "poor man and poor men." This is an instance of the fondness of the common people for alliteration. Further examples occur almost on every page. The old lady imagines she has got hold of two different words, when in reality the latter is only the Arabic irregular (or broken) plural of the first word.

n. 3. Note that to take off the Vazír's hat is in itself, according to Eastern ideas, considered a most derogatory proceeding. To put his head in a saucepan is but a trifle after this.

p. 81, n. 1. When Tímúr came into Sholih's room he would have taken off his shoes at the door and put them under his arm, as is the custom in the East. Bare-footed, he is of course able to move off now without making any noise.

p. 82 n. 1. Lit., "May the good deeds of my fathers become unlawful to you!" When anything is made unlawful to a person, to enjoy the same brings a curse instead of a blessing. Hence harám, in Persian, has come to mean 'accursed, noxious.'

n. 2. Lit., "What urgency have we to abandon good manners in your service (i.e. regarding you)?"

n. 3. Bismillah, 'In Allah's name,' is the phrase used when inviting a guest to set to work at the food. Here of course it is ironical.

n. 4. Kháter-jam, 'composedly,' 'not in a rage,' is used here adverbially. Samad Beg is of course fibbing, to make things go easily.

p 83, n. 1. Lit., "The word is even as I said."

n. 2. His foster-brother is a relation on whose word Tímúr can implicitly rely, and whose interests are naturally bound up with his own.

n. 3. In the compound verb dóst-dáshtan the auxiliary is alone repeated for the present tense. Observe, Tímúr begins his speech using the polite shumâ, 'you,' but soon falls into the familiar, 'thou,' for he is now addressing an inferior. He also affects the authoritative mâ, 'we.'

n. 4. In speaking of the dead, who have died in the odour of sanctity, the word marhúm, lit. "him to whom mercy has been shown," is used. But as Tímúr considers his uncle was a sinner, he refers to him as “him to whom mercy has not been shown.”

p. 84, n. 1. This is a couplet from some unknown poet : hence the inversion ‘kunad’ before ‘bátil.’ Tímúr’s grandiloquent phrases will be taken by all present as a measure of his capacity for the art of government.

n. 2. Observe, the negative in na-báyad ‘it must not be,’ governs the second clause as well.

Khud, shumá, here used to avoid the repetition ; and although the verb is not in the same person, there is no ambiguity in a sentence such as this. See Introd. p. xxxii.

n. 3. The verb is in the subjunctive, to mark the conditional. The whole sentence is most illogically constructed, and is not the less idiomatic on that account. Tímúr’s sudden elevation may not have tended to render his phrases less involved.

n. 4. ‘Mardumán’ (people) is opposed to ‘mardán’ (real men). The adjectives are all antithetical and sonorous. Shud, dád are put for Shudan, dádan after báyist.

p. 85, n. 1. Observe, the guards now salute him with the title of Khán, no longer plain Áká.

VOCABULARY.

Pronounce all the letters in the Transliteration.

VOWELS :—

a has the sound of a as in rural.

á „ a „ far.

e has the sound of the vowel in grey, or the e in peg.

i has the sound of i in bid.

í „ i „ police.

o „ o „ bone.

u „ u „ bull.

n, p, r (rolled), s, sh, t, v, w, y (consonant), z in the ordinary English way.

See the Table, p. xviii.

Verbs are given in the Infinitive ; when irregular, the present or imperative is added. The infinitive of every Persian Verb may be used as a noun of action, in which case our Present Participle best renders the meaning : Ex. kardan, 'to do,' or 'the doing.'

To avoid futile search, remember the prefixes and suffixes : Prefixed are—بـ, bi, to, etc., Preposition.

(بـ or بـ) بـ, bi, before Verbs, to mark the Imperative, etc.

مـ, mi, marking the Present, etc.

نـ, ni, Negative.

الـ (in Arabic phrases) ان, این, يـكـ, etc., joined in writing.

Affixed are—

ىـ, of unity, etc. (see Introd. p. xxxii).

گـانـ, انـ, هـانـ for the Plural.

The Personal terminations of the Verb : and the affixed Pronouns مـ, تـ, شـ, نـ, شـانـ, تـانـ, مـانـ ; the accusative رـا ; and تـرـ for comparatives.

ھم ham, too, also, even, yet, again; kadri ham nazdiktar, yet a little nearer. The use of ham is very idiomatic, it gives emphasis in certain cases, as ham bidih bi-Nisá, then given it to Nisá. It is often pleonastic: it begins a fresh sentence — in-ham, and this is, etc.

ھما hamán, often pronounced hamún, that same; hamún-tor, in that same way, just as; hamún hú, those too; hamún, hamún, when—then(that same time); hamán sá-at kih, at the very hour when.

ھمچو ham-chú, like, similar, so, in such a way, in this way, often, 'that'; hamchú khánhá, such Kháns as these.

ھمدیگر ham-dígar, each other.

ھمراہ hamráh, along with, with, accompanying.

ھمزدہ ham-zadah, topsy-turvy; bi-ham-zadah, in spite of.

ھمگی hamagi, everybody, all.

ھمہ hamah, all, every. hamíshah, always.

همین hamín, this same (thing); hamín kih, put elliptically, meaning at the time when, at such time as.

هنر honar, accomplishment, prowess.

هنوز hanúz, yet, still, even.
هوا havá, the air.

هولناک húlnák, frightened, terrified.

ھی hey! exclamation, Oh!
ھیچ hích, none, nothing, not at all, no (one, person); hích guftoyú, no conversation, talking.

ی

ی i, at the end of words, 'a,' some denoting unity, etc.: see Intr. p. xxxii.

The affix for the second pers. sing. pres. of the verb 'to be;' the sign of the izásat after nouns ending in a long vowel.

یا yá, or; yá kheyr, or not (vocative affix) O!

یاد دادن yád dádan, to explain, to instruct.

يکھی yakhíh, collar.

یعنی yaaní, that is to say, it means; yaaní chih, what does it mean?

یک yek or yik, one, a—often joined to the noun, etc., in writing.

یکی yekí, a certain one, some one.

یکبار yekbár, all at once, at some one time.

یکجا yekjá, in one place, together.

یکدانہ yekdáneh, single, unique, only.

یکراست yekrást, straight on towards.

یکوجی yek-vajabi, of one span, i.e., small, puny, undersized.

ین in (shortened form of این), this. At the end of a word the sign of the oblique case of the plural in Arabic.

یواش yavásh, slowly, gently.

یواشگی yaváshagí, softly, quietness.

THE VAZÍR OF LANKURÁN.

PERSIAN TEXT.

پریخانم و شعله خانم — خدا بر عمر و دولت بیفزاید
آقا — صد سالِ دیگی خانی و حکمرانی بکنی

[تیمور آقا با تفاوت حضرات از اطاق بیرون میابند - وزیر با تغیر
تمام در خانه میماند]

غلامها [بصدای بلند در میان حیاط] — تیمور خان سلامت باشد

[پرده میافتد]

 عروسی را انجام داد - کار شما اینست - مشغول
 تدارک لازمه نشا خانم بشوید - انشاء الله هفتنه
 آیند دستور العمل زفاف داده شود و بزودی انجام
 بگیرد - ننم برخانم - باجی شعله خانم خدا
 حافظ - مشغول کار و بار خود باشید

و برضایت خودش اورا بیم - اما شما بخاطر بعضی آرزوهای دور و دراز میخواستی اورا با آن غیر مرحوم بدھی - و ما هم از اینجهة نمیتوانستیم اصل مطلب را بشما اظهار بکنیم - این بود که شما در حق من بد گمان شده بخیال کشتن من افتاده بودی * ولیکن اتفاق آسمانی * کند تدبیرهای شخص باطل * خداوند بمقتضای عدالت - که مکافات عمل هر غنی و درویش را محقق پیش او مینهاد - راستکاران را رستگار فرموده - و عکس مراد شما روی داد - حالا من بنا ببد رفقاریهاییکه در ایام اقتدار نسبت بر عیت و نوکر از شما بروز کرده است - نباید دو باره سغل وزارت را بشما رجوع کنم و در عمل سابق خود باقی بگذارم - زیرا میدانم کارهاییکه عادی طبیعت کسی شده باشد محال است که از ذهن او بیرون برود تا از روی قاعده بکار مردم رسیدگی نماید - ولیکن نمک پروردۀ این خانواده بوده - من بکلی از تقصیرات کذشته شما چشم میپوشم - پس از این ما دام الحیات از من وظیفه خوار بوده در کمال امنیت و آسودگی سر خانه و عیال خود خواهی بود - اما در شغل وزارت

گی سر قول خود ایستاده است که آدم بتواند
باورش کند - حرف همانست که گفتم

[در این حال دوباره قیل و قال از حیاط بلند شده - سلیم
ییگ ایشیک آقاسی باشی و رضا برادر رضاعی * تیمور آقا داخل
اطاق میشوند]

سلیم بیگ - صمد بیگ برو عقب - تیمور آقا سرت
سلامت - خان عمومت بسیاحت دریا سوار شده
بود - ناگاه باید مخالف وزیده قایق وارونه گشته بدریا
غرق شده است - الحال مردم دور عمارت دیوانخانه
جمع آمده منتظرند تشریف ببرید بمسنده حکومت
و جای پدرت قرار بگیرید

تیمور آقا - رضا چنین است

رضا - بله قریان - چنین است بفرمائید برویم
[در الحال وزیر و صمد ییگ پیش آمده خاک میافتد] آقا
قربان شویم - مارا تصدق بکنید

تیمور آقا - صمد بیگ تو پا شو - برو کنار وا ایست
[صمد ییگ برخاسته کار میروند]

تیمور آقا [رو وزیر کرده] - وزیر - جهه آمدن من بخانه
شما آن بود که من خواهر زن تو نسا خانم را دوست
داشته و میدارم - میخواستم بحکم خدا و شرع رسول

شعله خافم [روی پایش افتاده التماس میکند] — امان آنی تیمور
آقا — دست نکه دار حوصله بکن

[تیمور آقا دست نکاه میدارد — در این حال صمد بیگ با چند
نفر غلام داخل اطاق شده — دم درب و میاپستد]

تیمور آقا — صمد بیگ غرض تو چه چیز است
میخواهی چکنی

صمد بیگ — آقا ما نوکر شما و پدر شما هستیم ما چه حد
داریم خدمت شما ترک ادب بکنیم — اما خودت
میدانی فرمایش خان است باید شمارا ببریم پیشش

تیمور آقا — مرا نمیتوانید زنده پیش او ببرید مگر سرم را
پیش او ببرید — سرم هم باین آسانیها دست کسی
نمیافتد — بسم الله قوه اش را داری — بیا پیش

صمد بیگ — آقا — فرض کن با آن طیانچه زدی یکی را
کشتنی — پنجاه غلام که همراه من است همه
اینها که نمیتوان کشت — هیچ اینها لازم نیست —
خان خاطر جمع قول داده عهدہ گرفته است کاری بشما نکند

تیمور آقا — من هرگز بقول و فعل او اعتبار ندارم — او

تریان سرت نزمع - یکدقيقة کار دارد ما هم تلاش
میکنیم برای شما [گرید کنان] پس در این اخر عمر
رواست بغل شعله خانم بچه ندیده بمیرم
[چشم را اشک آلوده کرده رو بنسا خانم میکند]
دختر بادیه را بگذار - میخواستی از اول همین یکی را بیآوری

[نها خانم بادیه را میگذارد - بادیه از گلوی وزیر پائین تر آمده است
پریخانم زود شعله خانم را بطرف پرده اشاره میکند - شعله خانم آهسته پرده را بلند کرده تیمور آقا را بیرون آورده - میبرد تا دم در - تیمور آقا از دم در آن طرف ررد میشود -
نها خانم بادیه را بر میدارد]

وزیر - اما دیگر - ننه الحال بنشین که منهم میخواهم با شما حرف بزنم

پریخانم - چشم فرزندم
[میخواهد بنشیند که از میان حیاط صدای قیل و قال بلند
میشود - دقیقه نگذشت تیمور آقا دست بطانجه داخل
اطاق میشود - وزیر از دیدن تیمور آقا متزال گشته]

تیمور آقا - خوبیهای پدرم حرامت باشد - آخر میخواهی
ناحق و ناروا مرا بکشتن بدھی - من تا ترا نکشم
کشته نمیشوم
[طبانچه را بط ف وزیر دراز میکند]

بگنجد کیله‌ء آنظرف برابر سر شماست - نسا خانم
بادیه‌ء اینجا بیاار

[نسا خانم میرود بادیه کوچکی را که آغا مسعود حاضر
مکرده بوده می‌آورد - پریخانم زود دست میرید کلاه وزیر را
بارامی از سرش بر میدارد]

وزیر - اگر چه تکلیف نامناسب است اما نمیتوانم
 مضایقه کنم - هر خوبیه گفته اند بایست عمل کرد -
کاش خدا آرزوی شعله خانم را برساند
پریخانم - بلی قربان سرت - نسا خانم بادیه را بگذار سرش
[نسا خانم بادیدرا میگذارد بادیه تا دم ابروهای وزیر می‌آید -
دیگر پائین تر نمیرود - نسا خانم زور می‌زند که پائین تر رود]
وزیر [هردو دستش را بلند کرده] - اف ای امان چه میکنید - دماغم خورد شد - یواش

[بادیدرا از سرش بر میدارد]

پریخانم [زود] - دختر بادیه بزرگتر بیاار
[نسا خانم دویده - زودی یک بادیه بزرگ می‌آورد]
وزیر - ای ننه جان - بخاطر خدا - نمیشود اینکار بوقت
دیگر بماند - خلا میخواستم با شما حرف بزنم - مطلوب واجبی داشتم
پریخانم - نه ننه جان نمیشود - وقتیش میگذرد -

وزیر — خوب شد خودتان تشریف آوردید — بفرمائید بنشینید

پرخانم — دردت بجانم — وقت نشستن نیست — باز
میروی نمیتوانم به بینمت — گوشت بمن باشد —
حرفی داشتم بگوییمت — الحمد لله آنقدر مشغله داری
که نمیتوان شمارا دید

وزیر — بلى علی الخصوص اینروزها که هیچ مجال نداشتم —
بگو به بینم مطلبتان چیست

پرخانم — دردت بجانم — چندان مطلبی نبود — رفته
بودم از قربان فالگیر دعا بکیر انشاء الله از دخترم
شعله خانم خدا پسری بشما کرامت کند — فالگیر
دعارا نوشته — گفته است باید سه برابر سر وزیر
کندم سمنو بگذاری — بفقیر و فقرا بخش کنی — الحال
باید سه برابر سر شمارا بگیم که وقت سمنو نمیگذرد
وزیر — تکلیف عجیبی میکنی — ننه — ما دام که سر من
در بدنو منست چه طور میتوانی سر مرا بکشی
برابر شرا بگیری

پرخانم — دردت بجانم — میتوانم — خیلی آسانست —
فالگیر خودش یادم داده است — ظرف گودی
بایست سر شما گذاشت — بهر ظرفی که سرتان

وزیر [پشت سرش] — دخترم — من مگر در حق خواهه‌تو
بد گمان می‌شوم — این حرفهara از بابت نصیحت باو گفت

شعله خانم — نمی‌شد که این نصیحت را بزنست زیبا خانم بکنی

وزیر — البته — فردا باو ازین هم سخت‌تر شرا خواهم گفت
شعله خانم — فردا پس چرا — امروز مگر نمی‌توانی بروی
وزیر — حالا دیگر چندان لازم نیست زیراکه فرضآ تیمور آقا
رفیق او هم بوده باشد بسراش رسید — یا پیدا شده
بکشتن خواهد رفت — یا گریخته — ازین ولایت در
بدر خواهد افتاد — دیگر من بعد در اینباب هیچ
گفتنگو لازم نیست — باید بتدارک عروسی نسا خانم
مشغول شد

شعله خانم — پس برو اطاق مادرم این حرفهara با او گفت و
شنید بکن — اینها کار من که نیست

وزیر — برو مادرت را هم صدا کن بیآید اینجا — در اینجا
گفت و شنید نمائیم

[در اینحال در باز شده پریخانم و نسا خانم داخل می‌شوند — وزیر
رومیکند به پریخانم]

ناموسِ خود قانرا بباد ندهید - نگویند خواه رزن خان
بنام حرمها آمد و رفت دارد

شعله خانم [بنانی و آرام قلب] — بفرمائید به بینم من با کدام
نام حرمها آمد و رفت دارم

وزیر — مثلًاً تیمور آقا که در اطاقِ تو دیدمش

شعله خانم — بلى با زنت زیبا خانم — پشتِ این پرده
وزیر — راست است — من که در حقِ شما بد گمان نشدم —
ممکن است این تقصیر از زیبا خانم سرزده باشد —

من این حرفهara بخاطر آن بشما میگویم — طوری
نشست و بر خاست بکنی — نسبت بشما حرفِ
بد پیش خان گفته نشود که دلش از نسا خانم سرد
 بشود — چونکه الحال برای نسا خانم بی اختیار
است — بمن فرموده است تا هفتنه دیگر تدارکش
به بینم عروسی کند — این هم انگشتربست پیشکش
فرستاده — نسا خانم بیا بگیر — بک انگشت

[انگشترا کفِ دستِ نسا خانم میگذارد]

نسا خانم — دختری که در حقِ خواهش بد گمان بشوند
لایقِ خان نمیباشد — این انگشترا ببرید — لایقِ خان
دختر پیدا کرده انگشتش بکنید

[انگشترا پیش وزیر زمین میگذارد بیرون میرود]

تیمور آقا [هرگز بحالت خود تغییر نداده - بارامی] — من هرگز دیگر
پشتِ این پرده نخواهم رفت - بگذار بیاید مرا
هم اینجا به بینند

شعله خانم و نسا خانم [روی پایش افتاده زانوهای اورا بغل کرده
با خطراب تمام] — بخاطرِ خدا - خودترا بموجِ خون
نزن - ترا بقبر پدرت پشتِ پرده قایم شو

تیمور آقا — هرگز

آغا مسعود [دو باره سرش را از در تو کرده] — ای امان وزیر رسید

شعله خانم و نسا خانم — ای دور سرت بگردم - بما رحم
کن - وزیر این دفعه هم اگر شمارا اینجا به بینند بی
شک مارا بکشتن میدهد

تیمور آقا — ها محض خاطر شما

[میرود پشتِ پرده - یک ثانیه گذشته وزیر داخل اطاق میشود]

وزیر — خوب شد که شما هر دو اینجا هستید بر من
واجب شده بود با شما صحبتی بکنم دلтан با من
باشد - شعله میدانی خواهی ترا که بخان بدھیم
درجۀ من رتبه تو چه قدر زیادتر خواهد شد - در
اینصورت آیا نباید که شما فکر نیکنامی خود بیفتد -

(۴۶)

اینجا بگذارم - شوهرت با من بنای نمک بحرامی
گذارد - منهم که نمیتوانم نامزد خودم را دیگر خانه
او بگذارم من بعد هم مثل سابق اینجا آمد و

شد کنم

شعله خانم - خیلی خوب من هم باین امر راضی
هستم - اما روزِ روشن اینجا آمدند خوب نبود - خودت نمیدانی که زیبا خانم از صد جا آدم بکمین
ما گذاشته است که بیت پنهانه ترا بکشن بدهد
و مارا بد نام نماید - بهترش این است که الحال
بطوری از اینجا کفار بکشی نصف شب با اسب
و آدم دم دروازه آماده بشوید - من همان ساعت
نساخانم را بپرون آورده دست شما بسپارم بردار ببر

تیمور آقا - نسا خانم تو هم که راضی هستی
نسا خانم - البته که راضی هستم - دیگر غیر از این چاره
نمانده است [در اینحال آغا مسعود از دم درب داد میزند]

ای امان وزیر میآید

شعله خانم و نسا خانم [زنگ روشن بریده] - ای وای ننه - امان ای تیمور آقا - پشت این پرده قایم شو - به بینم این ظالم را میتوانیم رد بکنیم

کند - تیمور آقا طبائچه کشیده فراشهارا متفرق کرد از
میان در رفت - خان پنجاه نفر آدم مأمور فرموده
است هرجا باشد پیدا کنند - بگیرند - دست بسته
پیش خان بیاورند بدهد بکشند - حال همه
شهر و خانهارا آدم افتداده میگردند که پیدا ش
کنند

[نسا خانم از زیادتی غصه آهی میکشد - هم در آن حال
در بازشده تیمور آقا داخل میشود]

شعله خانم - ای واي ننه جان - این چه حالتی است - اینجا چرا آمدی - چه طور آمدی - مگر دل شیر
داری یا از جانت نمیترسی

تیمور آقا [تبسم کرده] - چه شده از جانم بترسم
شعله خانم - چه نه شده است - خان آدم گذاشته هرجا
به بینند پیدات کنند بگیرند ببرند بکشند - تو همچو
خاطر جمع چرا اینجا میانی - آغا مسعود بارک الله
برو بیرون بیا کسی اینجا نیاید
[آغا مسعود بیرون میرود]

تیمور آقا - بخيالت ميرسد من از ترس کشته شدن امروز
ديدين نسا خانم نیایم - اين سردا در راه او گذاشته ام
اما حالا بخيال هم نیامده ام - میخواهم امشب نسا
خانم را بر دارم ببزم جائی ديکر - من بعد نميتوانم اورا

مجلس چهارم

[در اطاق شعله خانم واقع میشود - شعله خانم و نسا خانم با حالت افسطراب و نگرانی نشسته اند با همیگر حرف میزنند]

نسا خانم — نفهمیدیم چه شد - کارشان بکجا رسید - مسعود نیآمد - خبری نیآورد - دلم خیلی مضطرب است

شعله خانم — دل تو چرا مضطرب میشود بقول خودت
خان که نمیتواند کاری در حق تیمور آقا بکند

نسا خانم — راست است که نمیتواند کاری کند - اما میترسم میان من و تیمور آقا جدائی بیفتند که از مرگ بدتر است

[در انتحال آغا مسوعه از در داخل میشود]

شعله خانم — آغا مسعود بگو به بینم چه طور شد
آغا مسعود — چه میخواستی بشود - وزیر بخان عرض کرد - خان فرستاد - تیمور آقا را آوردند - میخواست خفه

خان — عزیز آقا [عزیز آقا پیش میابد] لوتکه حاضر است
عزیز آقا — بلی حاضر است

خان [بر خاسته] — وزیر تو برو آرام بگیر — غم مخور — قصاصِ
تو بزمیں نخواهد ماند — بگیر — این انگشترا هم بدہ
بنسا خانم — امروز مخصوصاً فرستاده‌ام پیش زرگر — این
انگشترا از برای او گرفته آورده اند — مشغولِ تدارک
عروسي باشید — بعد از یک‌هفته بایست دست بکار شد
وزیر — بلی — بفرمایش سرکار عمل خواهم کرد

[تعظیم کرده بیرون می‌وڈ — بعد از آن خان با عزیز آقا سوار
لوتکه شده بسیر دریا می‌روند]

[پرده میافتد]

امانست - ای خان - مسفو ماشید - تصدق کنید -

یکدانه مادر است

[های های گریه میکند]

خان — نمیشود - نمیشود - استغفر الله [با تغیر تمام رو بفراشها

کرده] پدر سگها نگفتم بیدازد

[فراشها شال بدست حرکت دیگر کرده نزدیکتر میرسد -

تیمور آقا جلد دست بعقب برد طباقچه از کمرش

کشیده بطرف فراشها دراز میکند - فراشها از ترس آن

متفرق میشوند - تیمور آقا از میان گیر و دار کسار

جسته در میرود]

خان [بشت سرش] — ای بگیرید های - نگذارید برود

[همگی حرکت میکند اما هیچ کس عقب نمیکند]

خان [کم خلق رو باعیان کرده] — هیچ که از شماها لایق

مرحومتهای من نیستید - این جو ولاغی را چرا گذاشتید

در برود [کسی جواب نمیدهد]

خان — صمد بیک [صمد بیک پیش میاید] زود - پنجاه نفر

غلام همراه خود بر دار - تیمور را در هرجای دنیا

باشد سراغ کرده پیدا نموده میگیرید دست بسته

میآورید اینجا - تا اورا نکشم ولایت آرام نمیگیرد -

دل خودم هم بجا نمیآید

صمد بیک — چشم [از در بیرون میرود]

خان [باعیان] — بروید - مرخصید [همه متفرق میشوند]

چیز از خلفا و سلطان محمود غزنوی کمتر نخواهد بود - علی الخصوص درینباب
 [در این اثنا صد بیگ تیمور آقا داخل شده تعظیم میکند]
 خان [به تیمور آقا] — من بشما نفرموده ام هرگز با قمه حضور من نیایمید
 تیمور آقا — من که قمه نبسته ام
 خان — همچو بنظرم آمد — خوب — در حرمخانه وزیر
 چه کار داشتی [تیمور آقا سرشا پائین میکند] مقصود تو
 اینست — من در سرمتل تو پسر برادر نادرست
 جو ولاعی میان ولایتها بد نام بشوم — من دیگر مثل تو
 پسر برادر را هم نخواستم — بچه‌ها طناف [چند نفر فراش
 شال ترمه دست گرفته حاضر میشوند] بینند زید شال را گردین
 این لوطی جو لاشه — بکشیدش پائین
 [فراشها آماده میشوند بانداختن شال — دیدهای حضار مجلس بر
 اشک میشود]

ایشیک آقاسی و تمامی اهل خلوت — خان قربانت شویم — جوانست — ایندفعه تقدیرشرا ببخشید
 خان — بارواح پدرم که هرگز نخواهم بخشید [رو بفراشها کرده] بیندازید شال را
 [فراشها قدری هم نزدیکتر می‌ایند همگی از بزرگ و کوچک نمیتوانند
 خودداری بکنند — ب اختیار شروع میکنند بگرید کردن و
 بخاک میافتند بالحاج و التماس میکویند]

به بینید چه قدر از شما بی واهمه است - روز روشن
 بخانهٔ مثلِ من آدمی می‌آید - قصد عیالشرا مینماید
 خان [بغیظ آمده] - وزیر چه میکوئی تیمور این جرئت را
 کرده است یعنی چه
 وزیر - نمکِ تو کورم کند اگر خلاف عرض کرده باشم - خودم بچشمِ خودم دیدم - گرفتمش بر دارم بیاورم
 خدمتِ شما - تکانم داده از دستم در رفته است
 خان - صمد بیگ زود برو - تیمور را صدا کن اینجا - اما در اینباب چیزی نگو

[صمد بیک تعظیم کرده میرود]

خان - وزیر آرام بگیر - حالا دیوانی بکنم که عبرتِ همهٔ عالم بشود

وزیر - قربانی شوم - پادشاهان سلف در اجرای عدالت
 اولاد و اقربای خود را ترحم نکرده اند - خلفای عظیم
 الشان بجهةٍ کج نگاه کردن بعیال مردم فرزندان خود را
 بازخواستهای شدید فرموده اند - سلطان محمود غزنوی
 برای این جرم یکی از مقربان خود را بدستِ خود
 گردان زد - اینست بمرور و دهور وصفِ عدالتیان در
 عالم مذکور و باقیست

خان [بوزیر] - وزیر - آن خواهی دید خان شما در هیچ

واحجب است - بکار مردم ملحوظند - بفرمائید اینمرد
 یک خلعتی هم باو بدهد - راضیش کند - خصوصاً این
 حکیم را بندۀ میشناشم - خیلی حکیم خاذ قیست
 خان - حالا که آشنای شماست - همچو بشود بحرف شما
 عمل کنند [رو عارض کرد] ایمده - برو - یک دانه
 چو خاب حکیم تعرف کن از تو راضی بشود - صمد بیگ
 فراش بدۀ برود - چو خارا ازینمرد بگیرد بحکیم بدهد
 [صمد بیگ پائین می‌آید - در این اثنا وزیر نفس زنان از در
 داخل طالار میشود قلمدانشرا از جیب پیرون آورده پیش
 خان زمین میگذارد]

وزیر - قربانست شوم - دیگر وزارت من بس است - کفایت کرد - عوض خدمتهایم بمن رسید - من بعد
 وزارترا بهرکس سزاوار میدانید بدھید - من بایست
 سر خودمرا بردارم - از این ولایت در بدر شوم
 خان [متعجب] - جناب وزیر چه شده است مگر - این چه
 حالتی است - برای چه

وزیر - قربانست شوم - در همه روی زمین امروز عدالت و
 انصاف و مروت سرکار ورد زبانهاست - از ترس شما کسی
 از بندگان دربار بمال و عیال فقیری دست درازی
 نتوانسته است بکند - پسر برادر شما تیمور آقا

حکیمه - سه تماش دادم - پاله سر بر لرم آوردمش
 بامید اینکه چاقش کند - بر سیدن سر مرض خونش
 گرفت - بیرون آمدن خون همان - مردن بر لرم همان -
 حلا میگویم - بیموت لا محالة پولم را پسم بدء - پولم را
 پس نمیدهد هیچ - میگوید اگر فصدش نمیکردم بدتر
 از این میشد - هنوز ادعائی هم با من دارد - بدادرم

برس - دور سرت گردم

خان [بمدعی علیه] - جناب حکیم - چه طور اگر فصدش
 نمیکردی بدتر از این میشد - بدتر از این چه میشد
 مدعی علیه - قربانت شوم - خان - برادر این بعرض مهلک
 استسقا مبتلا بود - اگر خون نمیگرفتم - شش ماه
 بعد از این بیشک و شببه میمرد - بیکث خون گرفتن
 اورا از زحمت خرج یچای ششماه دیگر خلاص کرده ام
 خان - جناب حکیم پس از این قرار بقول شما باید این
 مرد مبلغ دیگر هم باز بشما تعارف بدهد

حکیم - بلى - قربانت بگردم - اگر انصاف بکند - البته
 خان - [رو حاضرین کرده] والله نمیدانم دیوان اینهارا چه نحو
 بکنم که قطع دعوا بشود - هرگز دعوا تی باین مشکلی را
 دچار نشده بودم

یکی از حاضرین - قربان سرت - احترام طایفه حکما

خان — [بعدی] ای مردکه — تو هم برو بزن یک چشم اسب
 اینرا کورکن — السن بالسن و العین بالعین و الجروح
 قصاص اینکه کار مشکلی نیست — صمد بیگ فراشرا
 روانه کن — برو آجها باشد — تا آن شخص قصاص خودرا بگیرد

[صمد بیگ تعظیم کرده پائین امده فراش بانها داده برمیگردد]
 خان — سلیم بیگ بگو — عارض دیگر هم اگر هست پیش
 بیآینند — زود باشید که امروز میخواهم بسیاحت بروم
 سلیم بیگ — تدبیر بیگ عارض دیگر اگر داری پیش بیآور
 [قادر بیگ دو نفر دیگر پیش مباورد]

خان — اخ حکومت دیگر از تو با زحمت ترجیزی در
 دنیا هست — مردم همه در فکر و خیال آسایش خود
 است — من باید فکر هزار هزار نفر را داشته باشم — در
 دلش را وارسی کنم — از اول حکومتم تا امروز هر گز
 عارضی را از درخانه خود رد نداده ام
 سلیم بیگ — دعای اینهمه مردم اجر زحمت شماست —
 در حقیقت این مردم برای شما بمنزله عیالند —
 آبادی این ولایت لنگران از برکت عدالت شماست
 [عارضین پیش امده تعظیم مینمایند]

مدعی — خان قربونت — برام ناخوش بو — گفتند این پیا

ایشیک اقاسی باشی [از میان طالار] قدیر بیگ عارضین را
بانوبه بیآر جلو
[قدیر بیگ دو نفر - مدعی و مدعی علیمرا پیش میاورد تعظیم
میکند]

عارض مدعی — خان قربانت شوم عرض دارم
خان — بگو — به بینم — مرد که چه عرض داری
مدعی — خان قربانت شوم — امروز اسمرا بردۀ بودم رودخانه
اب بدّهم — اسب از دستم در رفت گریخت — این
مرد از جلو میآمد — صداش کردم — ای مرد بخاطر
خدا این اسبرا بر گردان — خم شد سنگی از زمین بر
داشت بطرف اسب انداخت — سنگ پیچشم راست
اسب خورده کورکرد ... الحال اسب بی مصرف شده
است دیگر بکار من نمیخورد — توان اسبرا میخواهم —
نمیدهد — با من مجادله میکند
خان [بعدی علیه] — چنین است — مرد که
مدعی علیه — قربانت شوم چنین است — اما من عمداً
سنگ نینداخته ام
خان — پوچ نگو — اگر قصد نباشد چه طور میشود سنگ را
برداشت انداخت — تو هم اسب داری یا نه
مدعی علیه — دارم — قربانت شوم

مجلس سیم

[واقع میشود در کارِ دریا در دیوان خانهِ خان لنگران - خان صدر طالار روی تخت نشسته است - سلیم یگ ایشیک افاسی باشی چوپی دست گرفته در حضور خان ایستاده است - و از دو طرف اعیان و نجایی لنگران صفت کشیده‌اند - صمد یگ فراشاشی - عزیز آقای پیشخدمت باشی با دو صد نفر پیشخدمت دم درب نشده‌اند - و در زیر طالار عارضین نزدِ قدیر یگ نایب ایشیک افاسی منتظر احصار اند - فراشها سمت پائین طالار پشت در جمع شده اند]

خان - امروز هوا خیلی خوب شده است - بعد از دیوان میخواهم قدری روی دریا سیر کنم دلم باز بشود - عزیز آقا بکشتبانان فرمان بدۀ کنارِ دریا لوتکه حاضر کنند

عزیز آقا - چشم [بیرون مبود]

خان - سلیم بیگ بگو عارضین را بحضور بیآ ورند

(۲۰)

نسا خانم — ندرس — خان نمیتواند تیمور آقا را بکشد — اما
میبایست اینطور نشود — حال که شده است مطلب
مطول خواهد شد — ننه جانم ملخواهدت — برویم
اطاق او — اغا مسعود را بفرستیم در خانه از برانی مسا
خبر بیآورد

[هر دو میروند پرده میانند]

شده چه جگی قبوا خوردن است - من آن میروم
 خدمتِ خان معلوم خواهد شد
 [آغا مسعود عقب کشیده میخواهد رخته قهوه را از سر رخت
 خود پاک کند]

وزیر [از شدتِ پریشان] - زود برو فرمایش کن - اسب
 قرمز مرد بدنه و جبهه کهرا هم زین کنند - بکشند بیرون - زودها
 آغا مسعود - بلی بلی آقا - چشم - بطور یکه فرمودید آن حاضر میکنم
] بعد از آن وزیر بیرون میرود [

شعله خانم - الله اکبر - کار غریبی دچار شدیم - جانم
 حلاص شد - خدا یا شکر [میان حرف نسا خانم میرسد
 - رو میکند بنسا خانم] نسا - کار غریبی اتفاق افتاد
 خبر نداری - وزیر تیمور اقرا با زیبا خانم پشت
 پرده دید
 نسا خانم - راستی - چه چی میگوئی زیبا خانم پشت پرده
 چه میکرد

شعله خانم - نمیدانم لکاته کی آمده آنجا رفته است - که
 جانِ مرا خرید - اما خان بی شاک و شبیه تیمور اقرا
 میکشد - نمیدانم برای خلاصی او چه چاره باید کرد

شعله خانم — ای لکاته بدھن من چرا بزند — اگر او مرد باشد
 باید ترا ریز ریز کند که با پسر بیگانه یکجا گرفته است
 وزیر — [زیبا خانم] البته ترا ریز ریز باید کرد — حالا مهلتی
 بمن بدھ تا خود را پیش خان برسانم — اول کار رفیقت را
 بسازم — بعد در حق خودت هم فکری خواهم کرد — تو
 همه عمرت را بدروغ گوئی و کذابی صرف کرده — من
 ترا میشناسم

زیبا خانم [خشمناک] — انصافاً — من دروغگویم اما ما شاء الله
 شما همه راستگو هستید — همچو که از حرف خودت که
 نقل کردي معلوم شد

وزیر — گم شو از پیش چشم — لکاته
 [زیبا خانم از اطاق بیرون میزود]

وزیر — شعله راستش را بگو — به بینم از این عمل خبر داري یا نه

شعله خانم — بمرگ خودت که من در این خصوص بهیچ
 وجه تقصیر کار نیستم [در این حال خواجه مسعود قهوه را
 اورد بفتحان رفته از پشت سر وزیر] آقا قهوه میل بفرمائید

وزیر [بر گشته فیجان را بادست زده قهوه بر سر خواجه مسعود رفته] —
 گم شو هي نیمسوز خر — در همچو جائی حوصله ام تنگ

بیخیال بر گشتم آمدیم خانه — ما که بیخبر رسیده‌ایم
 نتوانسته‌اند پیش روی ما در بروند — هر دو رفته‌اند
 پشت پرده هم عیش و نوش کرده باشند و هم قایم
 شده باشند تا وقتیکه من بیرونی جائی بروم فرمت
 گیر بیارند در روند — راستش اینست عقلت را
 بسرت جمع کن — بمکر این بیجیا گول مخور — در باره
 من ناحق بد گمان مباش

زیبا خانم — [فریاد کنان بشله خانم] ای بد ذات — اینها چه
 حرفه‌است پیش خود میسازی — اسم خودت را سر
 من میگذاری — واي — واي — من خودرا میکشم بخدا
 شله خانم — بد ذات خودتی — لکاته هم هستی — میخواهی
 خودترا بکش — میخواهی بگذار — این حیله بازیهای تو
 بهمه و اهل لنگران معلوم شده است — بداد و فریاد
 کردن دیگر نمیتوانی خودترا درست کار قلم بدھی —
 شوهرت چشم دارد — می بینند کار کار تست یا کار
 من است

زیبا خانم — ای امان — داد — خدایا — من خودمرا میکشم —
 ای مرد چرا بدھن این بیجیا نمیزني که همچو بھتاني برای من درست میکند — تو هم ایستاده تماشا میکنی

زیبا خانم — مگر نتوانستم بپیرون نیامدم — میگفت حرف

زدی خنجر را تا دسته توی دلت فروه میکنم

وزیر — [تاملی کرده — رو بشعله خانم میکند] شعله راستش را بگو

— این آدم پیش تو آمده بود

شعله خانم — این زن شما مثل طوطی ول کفتن ویرزش

دروغ گفتن را عادت دارد — من آنمرد که را هرگز ندیده

نم و نمیشناسم

وزیر — چرا نمیشناسی — تیمور آقارا ندیده — خیلی خوب

میشناسیش

شعله خانم — تیمور آقا اینجا چه میکرد — مگر تیمور آقارا

شما زمینش زده — پیش مادرش نفرستاده

وزیر — نه — هي فضول — حرف مرا جواب بد — پس از این

قرار تیمور آقا پیش تو آمده بود

شعله خانم — خیر — بلخشید — تیمور آقا اگر پیش من میآمد

مرا با او یکجا میدیدی — زیبا خانم میدانست من

امروز حمام رفته ام — خیال کرده است اطاق من

حالی افتاده — خواسته است معشوقدرا بیا ورد اینجا

مشغول خوشگذرانی بشود — چونکه امروز نوبته اطاق

او بود که شما تشریف ببرید نتوانسته است اطاق

خدش ببرد — اتفاقاً حمام آب نداشت — ماهم

زیبا خانم — ای بیچاره — ارزنت شعله خانم بپرس که آدم
بیگانه توی اطاقش چه میکرد

وزیر — ای کلی — اول تو خودت جواب مرا بدء که با
نامحرم پشتِ یك پرده چه میکردی

زیبا خانم — بسیار خوب — اول من میگویم بعد او بگوید به
بینیم چه خواهد گفت — زنت — شعله خانم کنیزِ
مرا فحش داده بود — من آمده بودم بپرسم چرا پا
باندازه گلیمت دراز نمیکنی — کنیزِ من نان خورِ تو که
نیست چرا فحشش میدهی — آمدم دیدم نیست —
میخواستم برگرم — دیدم شعله خانم با مردی صحبت
کنان از آنسرو بطرفِ اطاق میآید — دست پاچه
شدم — نتوانستم بیرون بروم — رفتم پشتِ پرده قایم
شدم — به بینم اینها چه خواهند کرد بعد خبرت کنم —
علی الخصوص که سر برهنه هم بودم نمیتوانستم رو واژ
پیش روی نامحرم وا ایستم — اتفاقاً شما رسیدید —
وقتیکه نزدیکتر شدی آنهم چاره ندید — خواست از
شما رو پنهان کند — آمد پشتِ پرده قایم شد تا تو بروی

وزیر — اگر راست میگوئی چرا آنوقت بیرون نیآمدی مرا
خبر کنی

تیمور آقا [بازوش را تکان داده] — ویل کن
وزیر [سخت تر چشیده] — محال است — نمیگذارم بروی تا
جوابم را ندهی

[تیمور آقا تنگ آمده با پکدست پشت گردنش چشیده با
دست دیگر پاچه شرا گرفته — از زمین بلند کرده —
میاندازدش در وسط اطاق مثل پلاس پهن شده — زود

از در بیرون جسته میرود]

وزیر — [بعد از لمحه حال آمده — رو بزیبا خانم کرده] ای لوند — دیگر این چه بلاهی بود سر من آوردي
زیبا خانم — مگر من بسرت آوردم — بمن چه دخل دارد —
ای بیچاره از بجا خبرداری

وزیر — [خشناک] نفست بگیرد لکاته — زبان ریزی مکن —
دیگر — شناختم — اینهمه هرزگیها کار خودت بوده
است — انشاء الله خدمت شما میرسم

زیبا خانم — ای بیچاره آخر بگو به بینم برای چه خدمت
من میرسی — خلاف شرع کردم — فاسق گرفتم —
خانده کسی رفتم — دزدی کردم — حیزی کردم — چه کردم

وزیر — سلیطه — دیگر ملینواهی چه بکنی — بالاتر از اینکه با
همچو گردن کلفتی پشت پرده دیدمت

شعله خانم [خندان شده] — ای مرد عزیز — این چه کاریست گردهء بلکه بچهء مردم میافتد میمرد روزگار مادرش سیاه میشد

وزیر — بسلی خودم خیلی پشیمان شدم — اما چه فایده همچو اتفاق افتاد

شعله خانم — خوب — پس بیچاره همانجا روی زمین ماند — تو پا شدی آمدی هنرترا بمن نشان بدھی وزیر — خیر — فراشها کول گرفتند بردند پیش مادرش

[از پلجرفها تیمور آقا نمیتواند از خنده خود داری کند — بق میخندد — وزیرزود پا شده میرود پرده را بلند کرده — زیبا خانم و تیمور آقا را پشت پرده دیده — ماتش میبرد — شعله خانم هم از دیدن زیبا خانم متیر میماند]

وزیر — سبحان الله این دیگر چه اوضاعی است [روشرا به تیمور آقا کرده فریاد میزنند] آقا شما اینجا چه میکنید [تیمور آقا سرش را پائین می اندازد — باز]

وزیر — آخر — بگو به بینم شما کجا — اینجا کجا — اینجا چه میکردي — کارت چه بود

[تیمور آقا جواب نمیدهد از پشت پرده بیرون آمده سرش را پائین انداخته میخواهد برود]

وزیر [بازشرا گرفته] — تمیگذارم بروی تا نگوئی اینجا چ میکردى — ده بگو

وزیر — خیر طولی نداره — این بود که امروز با چند نفر
 از بزرگان حضور خان نشسته بودیم از قوت تیمور آقا
 صحبت شد — همه گفتند — در همه لکران بزور
 تیمور آقا کسی بهم نمیرسد — خان هم تصدیق نمود —
 من انکار کدم — گفتم — تیمور آقا هیچ زور ندارد — هر چند در عید ماه روزه چند نفر زمین زد — اما
 همه بچه مچه بودند — تیمور آقا حضور ایستاده بود —
 خان حرف مرا قبول نکرده گفت — شما بچه دلیل
 ثابت میکنی — جواب دادم که لایق شان من نیست
 والا در این پنجاه سالگی با تیمور آقا کشتی میگرفتم
 زمینش میزدم میدیدید — خان هم که همیشه این
 قبیل کارهارا شوق دارد — فرمود حکما باید با تیمور
 آقا کشتی بگیریم — من هم چاره ندیده پا شدم — دست
 هم گرفتیم غیرت بمن زور آورده دقیقه نگذشته
 تیمور آقا را پیش لفک کشیدم — دیگر نمیدانم چه
 طور زمینش زده ام که طفل بیچاره بی حس افتاده
 روی زمین نقش بست — این قدر شد که بعد از
 نیم ساعت حال آمد — از زور استخوان کرم ضرب
 خورده بشدت درد میکند از آنجهنه است نمیتوانم
 درست راه بروم

اینجا بودنِ مرا کسی باو گفته باشد - بخدا - هرکس
 اینجا آمدنِ مرا باو گفته باشد با این خنجر شکمش را
 سفره سگ میکنم [دست غلپوش میبرد]
 شعله خانم - ای بابام - حالا وقتِ حرف زدن ندیست
 بیا برو پشت این پرده - به بینم میتوانم بیکطوری
 برگردانم [دست پاچه میرود پشتِ پرده]
 وزیر [لنگان لنگان داخلِ اطاق شده] - شعله خانم درجه کاری - احوالت خوش است
 شعله خانم - الحمد لله از دولتِ سرِ شما احوالِ من که
 همیشه خوبست - احوالِ شما چه طور است -
 خیلی عجیب است امروز اینجا تشریف آورده اید - باز چه طور شده است که همچو میلنگی ابروترا چرا
 کم کرده - خدا بد ندهد
 وزیر - اخ امروز کاری سر من آمده که مگو و مدرس -
 هرگز خیال نمیرسید - اوقاتِ مثلِ سگ تلغی است - آغا مسعود برو یك قهوة بپز بیار [خواجه مسعود سرفروش
 آورده میرود]
 شعله خانم - بفرماید - به بینم چه کاری سرتان آمده
 آقا - خیر - شاید گفتنش طول بکشد - ادب
 زد ت شما ناشد

است - از توں شاط و شوط و کولی گریء او هرگز
جرئت نخواهد کرد اینجا بباید

تیمور آقا - اینحرف حسابی است اما تنها باحتمال
اینحرف خاطر جمع نمیتوان شد - باز باید احتیاطرا
از دست نداد - بلکه یکبار سرزده داخل شد
شعله خانم - آسوده باشید بنسا خانم گفته ام توی دالان
بنشینند اگر وزیر پیدا شد بباید زود مارا خبر کند - مگر میترسی

تیمور آقا - نه من چرا میترسم - از که بترسم - من از آن
آدمها نیستم از کسی بترسم - اما بچندین جهه
نمیخواهم وزیر مرا اینجا به بیند برود بخان خبر بدهد - اول بعضی فکرها دارم باید آنها را تمام بکنم

شعله خانم - البته باید وزیر اینکارهارا نفهمد اگر زه بخان
میگوید - آنوقت دیگر - خر بیار باقلی بار کن
[در انحال نسا خانم صرشا توکرده] ای امان وزیر آمد

شعله خانم [مصطرب شده در رفته نگاه میکند] - ای امان
وزیر یکراست بسمت در اطاق ما می آید - اما
تیمور آقا دیگر نه پای رفتن داری و نه جای ماندن
تیمور آقا - پس تکلیف چیست - چه باید کرد بلکه

تیمور آقا — خوب برویم آنجا [هندو میروند - بعد]
 زیبا خانم [داخل اطاق شده] — ای لکاته اخر کارت را بجانی
 رسانده که کنیزِ مرا فحش بدھی بسرِ من بفرستی —
 وزیر ترا همچو هارگرد است [می بیند اطاق کسی نیست —
 اینطرف آنطرف نگاه کرده] اخ این قحبه باز به بینی
 کجا رفته است — خانه وزیر خراب بشود که آخر مرا
 باینروزها انداخت [میخواهد بر گردد صدای مرد شنیده تکان
 خورده می نشیند] ای واى — صدای مرد بیگانه میآید —
 ای واى — حالا از در داخل خواهد شد — چکنم —
 نمیتوانم بیرون بروم — ای واى چه خالک بسرم بزیم
 [اینطرف آنطرف میگردد میرود پشت پرده پنهان میشود — بعد
 تیمور آقا و شعله خانم داخل میشوند]

تیمور آقا — مادرت چه زود برگشت از حمام — نگذشت
 اطاق او حرف بزنیم — اینجا مناسب نبود — حرف
 خیلی داشتم — میشود که وزیر بیآید اینجا
 شعله خانم — خاطرت جمع باشد — وزیر نمیتواند امروز اینجاها بیاید

تیمور آقا — چرا نمیتواند
 شعله خانم — برای انکه امروز نوبه اطاق زیبا خانم

مردم و همهء بزرگان بخاطر خوبیهای پدرم اخلاصن
 قلبی بمن دارند - من مرغی نیستم گوشتمن را بخورند - خوب - اینرا بگو - که من بوزیر چه کرده ام از من برآجود

نسا خانم — شما که میرزا سلیم پسر وزیر قدیمی را پیش
 خود آورده - میرزا بیش کرده - وزیر همچو میفهمد
 اگر اختیاری دست شما بیفتد بایحروف میرزا سلیم
 هم پیش افتاده جای پدرش را خواهد گرفت - و حالا
 خیالش اینست بخان بگوید از این ولایت بیرونش
 کنند

تیمور آقا — بحروف او نیست میرزای مرا بیرون کند - نملت پدرم کوش کند در حق من اینظرور بد خیال
 شده است - انشاء الله همهء تدبیر اورا بهمزده
 بمطلب خود میرسم - اما شما هم راست میکوئید
 وزیر نباید هنوز میل مارا بفهمد - شعله خانم کجاست
 پارهء حرفها داشتم بگویمش

نسا خانم — اطاق مادرم است

تیمور آقا — نمیشود بروی صداش کنی آینجا

نسا خانم — مادرم خانه نیست هردو بروم آنجا

(۱۵)

ناظر [پاشده] — بلی — خاطرت جمع پاشد
وزیر — ده بروید
مهتر [آهسته] — خدا یا شگر

[پیش از همه غریلش را بر داشته میبزد — سایرین نیز پشت
سر او میروند]

[پرده می افتد]

بکوئی - حالیش بکنی و بفهمانی - مهتر جز طویله
 نباید جائی پا بگذارد - غریبل نباید هرگز اطاقی من
 بیفتد - امروز کریم مهتر غلبهیررا دست کرفته اطاقی
 من آمده غلبهیرش را اینجا گذاشته رفته است - غفلتآ
 گوشده کمانش را پا گذاردم - گوشده دیگرش بلند شده
 چنان بزانوم خورده که حالا هم از درد آن نمیتوانم
 پایمرا حرکت بدهم - من در یک ولایت بزرگ
 وزارت کرده امورش را راه میبرم - تو خیر
 کودن یکخانه و نوکرهاء خانه را نمیتوانی
 راه ببری

ناظر - آقا خدا عقل و فراست ترا بزرگ آفریده است
 من از کجا میتوانم مثل شما بشوم

وزیر [بفراشها] - بزنید

ناظر - آقا قربان سرت - این دفعه مرا تصدق بفرما - دیگر هرگز همچو عمل نخواهد شد

وزیر - بسیار خوب - حالا که شرط کرد وا کنید بس
 است - آقا بشیر ایندفعه را بخشیدمت - اگر من
 بعد دو باره اطاقی من غلبهیر دیده شود خودت را گشته بدان ها

وزیر [بفراشان] — بیاندارید ناظر را — پاهاش را فلک کنید

[فراشها ناظر را انداخته — فلک را حاضر کرده — پاهاش را فلک میکند — دو نفر فلک میگیرند و نفر چوب بر میدارند]

وزیر — بزرگی دید

[فراشها میزنند]

ناظر — ای آقا جان — دور سرت بگردم — تقصیر من چه چیز است مرا میزنند

وزیر [باغیظ اشاره کرده] — این غلبیر توی اطاقو من چه میکند

ناظر — چه غلبیر آقا

وزیر — چوب که خوردی میفهمی چه غلبیر

[فراشها میزنند]

ناظر — ای امان — ای داد — ای دور سرت گردم آقا آخر تقصیر من چیست — ای قربانیت شوم تقصیرم را بفرمایید — بعد بخواهید بکشید مختارید

وزیر [بفراشان] وا ایستید — آقا بشیر تقصیر تو اینست تکلیف نوکران در خانه را با آنها حالی نکرده — هر که این در خانه خدمت میکند اختیارش با تست — بایست جای هر کس و کار هر کدام آنها را خودت

مهتر — گلبهیز دستم بود — و استو اسپها جو گلبهیز میکرم
بدهم — فراموشم شد — اینجا مانده است

وزیر — بعد چرا نیآمدی ببری

مهتر — هیچ عقلم نرسید که اینجا مانده است — از
آنوقت تا حال هم پی غلبیر میگشتم

وزیر [بمهتر و بعد بعراض] — تو عقلت کجا بود حرامزاده —

حیدر — اقا بشیر ناظر را صدا کن الان بیآید اینجا —

چوب و فلك را هم با خودت بیآور — سه نفر فراش

هم از بیرون بکو بیآیند اینجا

[فراش میرود]

مهتر [بنا میکند بلزیدن و گرید کنان میگوید] — آقا مرا تصدق

بفرمائید — سرخان

وزیر [بغیظ ملایم] — نفست بگیرد پدر سگ

مهتر [شیون کن] — آقا قابانت شوم — غلط کردم — گه

خوردم — مرا بقبر پدرت ببخش — غلط کرده ام با

پدرم با مادرم — دیگر هرگز اینجا پا نمیگذارم

وزیر — خفه شو تخم خر

[در این اثنا آقا بشیر ناظر — حیدر فراش یکدسته چوب زیر

بغاش گرفته با فلك و سه نفر فراش دیگر داخل میشوند —

[سرفود میآورند]

حیدرِ فراش — آقا — دم صبح اطاق را جارو میکردم کریم
 مهتر غلبیر دستش بود اینجا آمد — قدری هرف زد
 برگشت رفت — معلوم میشد غلبیرش را اینجا گذاشته رفته

وزیر — آن مهتر قرمساقرا صدا کن به بینم — [فراش میرود پیء
 مهتر] — الله اکبر — مهتر اطاق من چکار دارد — غلبیر
 توی اطاق من چه میکند — امروز از هر طرف اوقات
 تلخی برای من رو میدهد — هر وقت من این اطاق
 خراب شده میآیم بی خطر بر نمیگردم
 زیبا خانم — البته برای اینکه شعله خانم اینجا نیست
 خالا که همچو است دیگر چرا اینجا میآمیشی
 برو اطاق شعله خانم

[فراش و مهتر داخل میشوند]

وزیر [با کمال تغیر] — پسره — کریم — تو در اطاق من چکار
 داری — جای تو طویله است بچه جرئت با اطاق من
 پا میگذاری پدر سوخته
 مهتر — آقا — من یکدقيقة آمده بودم از حیدر بپرسم
 شما امروز سوار میشوید — پرسیدم زود هم بیرون رفت
 وزیر — پس این غلبیر را چرا اینجا انداخته رفته

(۱۰)

خان - بعد بر گردم بی‌آیم بروم اطاق او به بینم چه میکنم
[بر میخیزد بروود]

زیبا خانم [اندرون امده] — امروز برای شام و نهار هرچه میل
دارید بفرماید بیزند

وزیر — زقوم زهر مار خوراکی بمن خوراندی که یکماه دیگر
هم نخورم باز سیرم

[میخواهد برود - وسط اطاق غربالی افتاده بود - متذکر چشمش
بطرف درب میرفته پایش را بگوشه کمان غربال گذارد
آن سر کمان بلند شده تراق بزانوش میخورد - زانوشا
گرفته اخرو کرد، مینشیند رو بزنش داد کشیده]
[

اخ مردم — این غلبیر اینجا چه میکند - پدر سوختها

زیبا خانم [متعجب] — من چه خبر دارم - چه میدانم
غلبیر اینجا چه میکند - هر وقت اینجا میانگ فحش
و جنگ برای ما میآوری - نیم تنہ را دیگری بپوشد - فحش را ما بشنویم

وزیر — فراش

[حیدر فراش از دهلیز باطاق امده دست بسینه سرفورد میکند -
زیبا خانم روشن را پوشانیده میرود بگوشه اطاق]

وزیر [خشمناک] — حیدر این غلبیر میان اطاق چه میکند

(۹)

آرام ندارد - نگفتمت با این سن و سال دختر
قاره جوان برای تو شایسته نیست - بحرفِ من
گوش نکردی - حالا سراتست - بکش

وزیر - خوب است - برو گم شو - بس است کفايت
کرد - ویلم کن - کار دارم

زیبا خانم [لند لند کان رفته زیرلب میگوید] — من چرا گم شوم - زنِ سوگلیت گم شود و فاسقش - همانها برای تو خوبند

وزیر [تنها] — عقلم قبول نمیکند که شعله خانم صاحبِ
این عمل بوده باشد اما احتمالِ کلی میرود زور و
قوتِ تیمور آقا را دیده خوشش آمده است - بچهه
جاهل بیخیال پیش این و آن تعریفش کرده
است - زنکه از حسودی حرفهای اورا بدلبستگی
نسبت داده چاه از براش میکند - بهر حال
میبايس است شعله را از این صرافت انداخت و بطوري
حالیش کرد که تیمور آقا چندان پرزور نیست -
انهارا که زمین زد همه بچههای یکوجبی بودند -
شاید باین تدبیر وصفِ تیمور آقا را از سر خود بیرون
کند - دیگر بژیانش نیآورد - برخیزم بسرم پیش

زیبا خانم — تنها ما نمیگوئیم — همه اهل لنکران ایس
 عمل را میدانند — میگویند تو چشمت را روی هم
 گذاشتند — مثل کبک سرترا زیر برف کردند —
 خوب و بد خودتر نمیفهمی — خیال میکنی مردم هم نمیفهمند

وزیر — این حرفها چه چیز است میزنی — شعله تیمور
 آقا را چه میشناسد — اورا کجا دیده است
 زیبا خانم — خودت نشان دادند — خودت نمودند

وزیر [صدای بلند] — من نموده ام — من نشان داده ام
 زیبا خانم — بلى که تو نشان دادند — البته که خودت
 نشان دادند — پس من نشان داده ام — تو بودی
 روز عید ماه روزه امده بزرن سوگلیت گفتی خان
 در بیرون قلعه بیگزاده هارا بکشتن میاندازد — تو و
 نسا خانم هم با خواجه و کنیز بیانگرد — در مردو
 بپای دیوار قلعه فرش بیندازند — بنشینید تماشا
 بکنید — آنها هم راه افتادند رفتد — آجها تیمور آقا
 تازه جوان بیست و پنجساله خوشگل پرقوت همه
 بیگزاده هارا زمین زد — شعله خانم یکدل نه هزار دل
 عاشق و گرفتار او شد — دیگر کسی چه میداند بچه
 حیله دست آورده است — اگر یک روز نبیندش

آخرش شنیده ام - همان ساعت که حاجی صالح را
خواستی فهمیدم - بقلبم اثر گرد - آمدم بیوشگی
پشت آن یکی در اطاق قایم شدم - گوش دادم -
دیدم همانطور است که خیال کرده بودم - خدا مبارک
کند نیم تنده یخه دکمه طلا برای زن سوگلیت - چشم تیمور آقا روشن - برای سوگلیش نیم تنده تازه
فرمایش رفته است - بپوشد پیش چشمش قر بدهد

وزیر - زنکه چرا حرف مفت میزني - تا کی از نا مربوط
گفتن خود دست برنمیداري - هیچ خجالت
نمیکشی - پیش روی من بعیال من تهمت میبنندی - ناموس مرا بباد میدهی - قباحت هم خوب
چیزیست در دنیا حیف نباشد .

زیبا خانم - اگر منهم میخواستم ناموس ترا باد بدhem - یکی از این جوانهای خوشگل و رعنای دست میآوردم - با او عشق بازی میکردم - ناموس ترا زن سوگلیت
باد میدهد که شب و روز با تیمور آقا دست بگردن
است - چند دفعه کنیزم بچشم خود دیده است
وزیر [رنگش پرده] - من بحرف تو و کنیزت هرگز باور ندارم

(۶)

حاجی صالح — خیر آقا من چه حد دارم سر شمارا فاش
کنم — لایقِ ریشِ منست
وزیر — بارک الله — ده برو مرخصی

[حاجی صالح تعظیم کرده از اطاق بیرون می‌رود پشت سر آن
زیبا خانم زود آن درب اطاق را دو دستی سخت باز کرده
داد و فرباد کنان داخل می‌شود — وزیر از این صدا نکان
خورده هولناک پشت سر نگاه می‌کند]

زیبا خانم — برای زن سوگلیت نیم تنه یخنه دوکمه طلا
فرمایش میدادید — بارک الله بمردی شما — خواهید
گفت خواهرم زن هدایت خان برای شعله خانم
سوقات فرستاده است — بارک الله — خواهرت را
بعن می‌شناسانی — خواهر تو از خسیسی مثل تاجرها
اصفهانی پنیر را توی شیشه کرده نانش را پشت شیشه
می‌کشد — حال همچو شده است که نیم تنه پنجاه
و شصت تومانی برای زن تو سوقات بفرستد —
یعنی من آنقدر احمقم که اینرا باور می‌کردم
وزیر — ضعیفه — مرا ترساندی — چه چی می‌گوئی — چه
سوقات — چه نیم تنه — دیوانه شده مگر
زیبا خانم — هیچ طفره نزن — زیانت را برمکران —
حرفا یکه با حاجی صالح می‌زدید هم‌هرا مو بمو تا

حاجی صالح — خیر آقا — من چه میدانم
 وزیر — پس من لابد باید پیش از وقت ترا از مطلب
 خبردار کنم — تا بازار هم که رفتی به رکس رسیدی
 شهرت بدھی که وزیر بمن چنین و چنان خدمت
 رجوع کرده است — اسايش را بما حرام کنی — نگذاری
 آسوده بنشينيم — عزيزِ من مطلب اينست — دو
 ماه بعد نوروز مانده است — ملخواهم چيزی غريبه
 در عيد بشعله خانم ببخشم — اگر اينجا بدھم بدوزند —
 زيبا خانم هم يك همچو چيزی خواهد خواست —
 بگيرم اضافه خرج است باو ريبندگی ندارد — نگيرم
 از قال و قيل خلاص نخواهم شد — همه روزه مایه
 در سرو اوقات تلحی است

حاجی صالح — آقا مگر وقتی که دوخته اشرا بخشيدی —
 زيبا خانم ديگر مثل آنرا نخواهد خواست
 وزیر — الله اکبر — عجب گير نيفتاديم — مرد که بتو چه —
 بتو هرچه ميگويند تو برو همانطور کن وقت دادن خواهم گفت خواهرم زن هدایت خانی رشتی اين نيم تنه را
 برای شعله خانم سوقات فرستاده است — آن وقت
 زيبا خانم نميتواند مرا مقصركند — اين حرفها را اينجا
 بكس گفته نگفته ها

وقتِ برگشتن همراه خود بیآور - اینهم پنجاه
 دانه طلاست - [بولهارا در میان کاغذ پیشش میگذارد]
 خرج کن - هرچه کم آمد برگشتن در ینجا - کار
 سازی میشود - زود برمیگردی یا خیر
 حاجی صالح - تا یکماه دیگر بر میگردم - کاری ندارم - پول
 نقد میبرم ابریشم بخرم برگرم - اما آقا اگر اندازه
 نیم تنه معلوم میشد - بسیار خوب بود - آنجا که
 بدوزنده شاید تنگ و گشاد بشود یا کوتاه و بلند بیآید - در خدمت سرکار مقصربشوم
 وزیر - عیب ندارد قدری گشاد و بلند بدوزنده - اگر
 اندازه نیامد - اینجا درست میکنند
 حاجی صالح - آقا نمیشود که پارچه اشرا بخرم و دکمه اش را
 هم بدhem بسازند - بیآورم اینجا - هرکس که میخواهد
 بپوشد باندازه قد او ببرند بدوزنده
 وزیر - اخ ایه بندۀ خدا - شماها عجب عادت کرده
 اید بزیاد کفتن و اظهار معرفت نمودن - مقصودت
 اینست من مطلب پوشیده را بیساخته آشکار بشما
 بگویم - تو که نمیدانی اگر من آنرا اینجا بدhem ببرند
 بدوزنده بچه قیل و قال خواهم افتاد - و چه اوقات تلحی خواهم کشید

مجلس اول

[بنجاه سال قبل ازین گنار دریای خزر در شهر لنکران خانه میرزا حبیب وزیر واقع میشود -

وزیر در اطاق دم اندرون نشته حاجی صالح پیش روی او ایستاده است]

وزیر — حاجی صالح شنیدم رشت میرروی — راست است
حاجی صالح — بلی آقا میرروم

وزیر — حاجی صالح خدمتی بشما رجوع خواهم کرد بایست آنجام بدھی — بجهة همین بون شمارا خواستم

حاجی صالح — بفرمانید آقا — باجان و دل برای انجام فرمایشات سرکار حاضر

وزیر — حاجی صالح — باید یگ نیم تنهه زری آبی در رشت بدھی بدوزند — تا امروز مثلش را در لنکران ندیده باشند — همین که نیم تنه حاضر شد — میدھی بزرگر بیست و چهار دانه دولکمه طلا — از تخم مرغ کوچکتر و از تخم کبوتر بزرگتر — درست میکنند — دور یخهاش میدوزند —
